Other than Markie's folly and Lennie's frequent attempts to parlay his rear-area radio mechanic duties into an artillery-ducking, Bear avoiding novel, there's no military "frauds" here that I know of.

I don't dispute the experience length, Brain.

READ WHAT WAS WRITTEN: Sir Frankie Of Scummiland tried to say I

That's false. I never said that.

I've been an LPN for 11 years now and an EMT before that.

the mistake every authority has made is.... when you cheapen a licence , you get lower standards of behaviour being displayed by the licensees.

when those who have licences did very little to get that licence they will treat that licence with very little respect.

when those licensees are governed by rules/regulations then their behaviour may well become the subject of complaints.

complaints must be investigated.
this costs money.

end result....
lowering the 'cost of administration' allows cb'ers onto amateur bands.
cb'ers on amateur bands will cause problems.
problems cause complaints.
complaints cause investigations.
investigations cost money.
money that was hoped to have been saved in the first place !!

and a lot of this behaviour can be put down to ONE THING.
(even the interview with an rsgb president on the arrl website shows this) the plan to get rid of compulsory morse testing for hf access.

Wrong.

Any picture that can be acquired in a place of public accomodation can be used for almost ANY purpose where the person photographed cannot reasonably expect privacy.

Point in case: A picture of you taken from over a 12 foot privacy fence would be a "bust"...A picture of you getting into a car in a driveway would not.

Do you think, for example, that photographers at public events go and get "permission" from each and every person who MAY appear in a shot?

So...Next time you're out for a stroll, going to buy groceries, or stopping to buy gas, just keep an eye out for the camera, and say "CHEESE!"

Hello Dana:

Yes far as I know we all are on food stamps, well fare, and what ever else is out there for a hand out.

I go in Thrusdays for my well fare check, its a blast we all get together ride the bus for free, down to the goverment office. Theres Mojave Desert Don, Left over Carbrator Parts, Insane Dwane, Molly Mcgee, Overdrive in Reverse, Hill Billy and all his kids, Hansom Ransom, Vietnam Dan, Barstow Bill, Grandma, Slick Willy, Boron Bob, Fright Hammer, and usually many others.

Its starts about 5 AM in the morning, we get on the radio and start talking to each other, gettin ready for our trip.

Once there at the well fare office, we always stand in line where "Well Fare Clare" is working. She is married to Mojave Desert Don my brother. So we get perferred service you might say. All ya gots to do is take Clare out to a nice place a few times a year and bam your in there!

Then we all go out to have a big breakfeast, again having a blast with most everyone there. Then theres the lying constest, who's got the biggest linear and tower with beam antennas and such.

Some times we have Vegas trips that we all go on, what a roit!

Many Collins Stations there totally paid for with well fare money. Ever hear of a well fare linear? I my self have a large antenna farm with many towers and antennie. I have a hole I cut out with my Saw Zaw, in the side of the trailor, it lets all the coaxes in.

Is this the Dana that stands in line 5?

Jay in the Great Mojave Desert, ... just down the road ah ways from the fillin station.

The Georgia SSB net has been causing malicious intentional QRM to K1MAN for years. You can hear them on other frequencies, planning and coordinating how they will jam K1MAN.

Then can you explain it to me then? Im not being flippant, I actually want to know why its important and why, in your words, it drops the quality of people who chose to become Amateur if they don't do morse... why does it make them any less of a good Amateur?... and why do you think that because morse might be dropped the band will become full of CB people who will wreak havoc? And why do you class all CB'ers as the same?

It was a fancy dress party and yes.. he did, but he didnt mean any offence by it. Sure if he had thought about it he would have realised the upset it would have caused some people but most people wouldnt have made a fuss. It was simply because of who he was and the chance for some high profile headlines. Ive dressed as a Nazi and flown a nazi flag on a few of the Fritz von nasty foxhunts ive been involved on with CB.. but there was no intent or malice behind it. Oh and i never got headlined because im not royalty.

Some people get hyper for any reason and they will put forward a seemingly good case but in reality... he was just a kid out for a party dressed up with his mates for a laugh.... now if hed have shot a few jews on the way there thats a different story ;o) all you have to do is observe the behaviour on this newsgroup.

the outrageous foul language used.

and then listen to 40m

by even attempting to do the morse test shows an attempt and willingness to improve.
something that 2500 showed they didnt have when they ran away.

and worse... they showed it to the authorities.

if 'u' are given a licence for almost no-effort then that licence is worthless because when lost ..it represents no-amount of effort.

you are wrong my License was given me with no more efort than it took to show and take the test (the book i had ordered to studiy arrived the day after the test

1521. Getting A Ham License

Here is the definition of hypocrisy:

Getting a ham license today requires memorization of 25 questions. Then, once licensed, the new ham actually believes he is a technical expert, when compared to a cb operator. Worse yet, the new ham reforms overnight and starts turning in truckers to Riley, for operating on the wrong channel.

Sure, I'll be happy too, just send me your name and address. I can show you how to set up a neat remote base using a VHF radio and a high speed TCP/IP link to do the job that way you can sit back behind the counter selling your grass seed and yakking on the radio back at the ranch. There are Ethernet to serial converters that plug in to a hub and you don't need a computer at the remote end. The serial ports then connect to the radios and other gear. Using rig control software at the home site all radio functions can be controlled over the Internet. Some antenna rotors are also serial port controllable too to round out the operation. The VHF link is used for the audio.

The following sites have a few examples of the converters.

Lol, great command of the English language there. I wonder if his morse is as bad........

I disagree. There might be one or two idiots but that doesnt fall completely at the ease of getting the licence.

Once again, after showing a willingness to actually bother to get licenced, being it easy or not, they have to purchase the said equipment. Surely your not saying CB'ers who dont give a rats ass about Amateur are spending their hard earnt? money on Amateur kit, and getting registered so you can find out who and where they are... just to mess about and upset a few advanced Amateurs? Seems a very strange way of going about things.

Surely these idiot users are more likely the completely unlicenced users on stolen radios or kids messing about on parents radios while they are out rather than someone who wants to become a "first step" Amateur? Also quite a few people who gain M3 licences or whatever the equivelent in the US surely would go on to intermediate and so on rather than just stop there. A few will yes but many will want to progress.

> when those licensees are governed by rules/regulations then their

Err, whats wrong with CBers becoming radio Amateurs? Its happened for years and years....long before the licence was made easier. And most of them became perfectly respected Amateurs.

NO....idiots on Amateur bands will cause problems. Or do you tar all CB radio users with the same brush?

Oh in that case it must be right then.....

> the plan to get rid of compulsory morse testing for hf access.

For gods sake... morse isnt the "be all and end all of radio", its an old out-dated form of communication which had its use in the past but is now just a form of elitist snobbery. Also trying to say anyone who doesnt want to learn morse is basically a "scumbag" shows Bigotry beyond contempt. Why not welcome the new Amateurs and encorage them to advance rather than look down on them. The licence was made easier because the userbase of Amateur was drastically on the decline. It was done to encorage more people to get involved and keep the "hobby" alive.

Wrong. What you describe is called a "float". But you didn't know that. You also didn't know that that avionics techs are routinely deployed with their units in the FMF. You didn't know these things because you have never been on float. This is supported by the fact that, upon deployment overseas, the Corps (and probably the other services) sends press releases to each Marine's hometown media center, yet there have been no press releases in Ohio, California or Tennessee for any Steve or Steven Robeson, USMC, during the time you claim to have been on active duty (public information, but it was easier for me since I still have connections at the station). The fact is that you were never deployed on float. And you can't do 18 years of active duty and -not- get deployed on float. It's part of the job.

Your pile of dirt grows larger by the day, Dudly.

Not to mention that he just pulled you off your issue. To address your issue, the Marine Corps does not have any medical occupations -- those are all handled by the Navy (the USMC being a branch of the Navy). But that brings up another interesting factoid; if Dudly -did- get his EMT card in '86 and the USMC knew about it, they most likely would have transferred him to the Navy since training for a Corpsman is much more expensive than for an avionics tech, and qualified Corpsmen are hard to find.

who knows if it stolen or imagined it may be stolen Stevie today may have just found the man born stevie j and exchanced id with him to leave behind his record in a life of crime for all we know, or the person posting as Stevie may be one of his kids who just doesn't understand his fathers true record and so loouses it up or it my be a kid repposing as his dad (who was also a liar) all far fecthed I agree but hardly more than some of Stevie gems

a favoritie being that My calling someone an elitist bitch justifies him saying the Todd's dad has aids a good year before I called the gal a bitch

the senario I mentioned are far fecthed but they hang together than stevie's "logic", but even that is like saying someone is more in favor of abolition than a Southern planter in 1860

Yup, Mr Baxter does laugh. As the owner of several hundred acres of prime Maine real estate, a large estate home, an extensive well-stocked ham radio shack, owner of a multi-million dollar trust fund, and having earned an undergraduate and a graduate degree in engineering with honors, Mr Baxter sure does laugh, All The Way To The Bank And he laughs at you, sitting there in your 800 sq ft rented hovel, spewing hate on the internet with your low-end computer and your dial up connection, drinking cheap beer and waiting for your next welfare check to arrive.

ROTFLMAO!

Sorry, Frankie.

Perhaps >>IF<< you'd done MORE than one HITCH you'd have had a bit more experience from which to draw on.

They ARE called "cruises". Yes, they are ALSO called "floats".

The dirt is yours, Frankie.

Too bad so mcuh of your ONE enlsitment was spent tied up in the Judge Advocate Corps.

And too bad you didn't put as much effort into being the Marine you SHOULD have been then as you perceive yourself now.

Nope.

What's "feeble" are your attempts to salve your twice court-martialed ego.

Ya shudda sucked-it-up and been the Marine you THINK you are now...

"VINSON", other than a United States aircraft carrier was NOT a "system" in ANY avionics system that was in service in ANY USMC aircraft while I was on active duty.

Guess it's a good thing I NEVER "claimed" any valor. And any "stolen" valor in THIS forum is Lennie's tour under the Bear and Markie's tous as a drafted gay pagan colonel in the Army Chemical Corps...Oh, and Frankie's misconception that his "service" was "honorable"

It wasn't then...It isn't now.

You "need" to ignore it since it highlights your foolishness...Not that it takes a lot to do that.

Then we have Frankie of Silliland in yet ANOTHER lie...

Frankie INSISTED that he had ample resources with which to "verify" any claims made, including an infered personal relationship with LtCol Oliver North.

If Frankie can't even research a public resource such as Promotion Board results, then there's massive doubt as to the validity of any other claim he makes.

And it still doesn't wash out the stupidity of YOUR claim, Frankie...

Since when does being an Active Duty Marine mean that a Marine can't ALSO have some other pursuits?

So..there were no Marines who hung out in the autoshop?

No Marines who bowled or played football? No Marines who sang in choirs, volunteered on local VFD's or other social programs?

You've still not even REMOTELY explained how being a Marine prevented me from ALSO being an EMT...Nor have you adequately explained how being an EMT prevented me from being a Marine...

Frankie, You get more and more assinine and, well, SILLY with each subsequent rant!

WHY would the Marine Corps take a Staff Sergeant, later Gunnery Sergeant from a critical MOS and transfer them to the Navy to be a Corpsman just because he has an off-duty interest in EMS?

The Marine Corps ALSO needed snipers, and I took home an "Rifle Expert" on each and every trip to the range. Why not send me to Scout/Sniper school with that logic?

Spin on and on, Frankie.

Everyone's had a more than adequate opportunity to see you dish up your stories only to see you fall flat on your court martialed face.

Coward and Liar...That's Frank Gilliland.

For the last time, plural of 'court-martial' (a hyphenated word) is 'courts-martial', not 'courts martials' you illiterate boob.

Correct. There is no prohibition against using "feeble" by non-medical personnel, but you might want to check if there's for medical personnel such as you've claimed to be.

So when I say that you are "nuts," you won't jump up and down and cry like a little baby, claiming I am practicing medicine, have to prove where I went to medical school, who granted my diploma, where was my license issued, blah, blah, blah, like you usually do.

Right?

And for the last time, who cares?

I don't have one, let alone two.

I managed to do my 18 years in the ACTIVE United States Marine Corps HONORABLY, you disgraced coward.

Brain, you continue to underscore your own double standard.

You want to be able to deceive, intimidate and mislead blindly, but then when asked to pony up substantiation of YOUR claims, everyone's "nuts", etc etc etc.

The BEST it seems you and your Feeble comrades can seem to pull together is the persistent rantings of a semi-literate degenerate and a disgraced, dishonorably discharged ex-Marine who's ONLY valid argument is my incorrect pluralization of "court martial".

They are the epitome of "lame".

You have your moments of lucidity, but they are waning.

Why is it that Frank spends a few years in the Marine Corps and knows the lingo, you spend >>>almost<<< a career in the Marine Corps and stumble around for the names of radio gear that you supposedly used, and stumble around using Army phrases instead of Marine phrases, claim

Makes me kind of sad to think that a fellow amateur and perhaps even a fellow veteran is such a liar. Makes me wonder if you grew up in juvie detention or something to always have to make up such preposterous stuff in order to get attention. Always have to put down the next guy

Already been this year. DD-214. You make a copy, sanitize SSN, DOB, scan it and post it instead of that dumpy photo of you on QRZ. Post a message here, then take it down after 24 hours. Then put up a photo of you with an Gold Oakleaf on each shoulder.

You see your assinine behavio[u]r as acceptable because it is in response to some perceived infraction of the rules or perceive some personal insult.

I understand it was a question.

Can YOU show where I said I was in the Army?

The OTHER question was directed at Markie and HIS suggestion that he served in the Army, using HIS collective "we" to suggest he was a part of it.

> Frank pegged you for what you are.

Frankie pegged nothing, Brain.

Frankie's misrepresentation of the truth about some terminology is, on the face of it, ludicrous. Lame at best, and laughable that in-the-rear-with-the-gear guys such as yourself and Lennie are impressed by his rantings.

First of all, where's this tale about "...names of radio gear you supposedly used" come from? Lennie's tried that rant for years and now Frankie picked up on it.

It never happened. It was part of Frankie's cross-dressing with Lennie.

And as for the "lingo", Frankie needed to be in the Corps longer.
His one tour, half of which was spent digging his butt out of trouble, only left him with HALF the story.

Nice try though.

Both questions not going to be answered...Not because they are fraudulent or "secret", but for the reasons we're already embroiled in THIS spat..."this much" is always the catalyst for more lies and accusations from your side of the fence.

Try to make as much from it as you care to do, Brain, but it's all you've got to play with.

Have fun.

It IS about him. He has no credibility. He lied to his country, he lied to the Corps, and now he's in here salving his "I Cudda Been A Contender" ex-Marine ego by trying to "beat up" on a former SNCO since this is the ONLY way he could do it and not get a third court martial.

Seems to me that that description falls right into your lap, Brain.

And perhaps why you felt compelled to invent your Somalia DXpedition gala...

As for the "liar"...well...All I can say is you've laid quite a bit of track of your own, Brain, and it's not that hard to follow.

Nope.

I've posted numerous publically researchable resources on NUMEROUS "claims", as you call them.

You simply pooh-pooh them off as "unreliable"...As if the USMC or the USAF would lie in order to support any USENET claims or challenges.

And as far as "dumpy" goes, Brain...It will be interesting to see how direct your gig line is, or whether it's a bit, uhhhhh...circumfrential....

What lying?

You keep on about lying, but with the exception of my refusal to discuss some aspects of my service duty, you have yet to validate a single one...

And I told you "have fun" with that one...It's all you get!

No Reserves.

A bit of that yellow creeping back up your spine, Brain?

Can't directly answer the question?

"We" know why!

The TRUTH would set you free!

Nope. I've already provided you with publically researchable resources. You refuse to use them. Oh well.

What "assinine behaviour"?

Not tolerating liar and deceivers?

Stop lying. Stop deceiving. See how fast things change for you.

I don't need permission.

Any picture obtained in a public domain does not require the subject's "permission". Your being IN the public domain is "permission".

Ask any papparazzi. That's how they get away with THEIR behaviour.

And the Supreme Court has upheld it.

What "pudgy", Brain...

You keep repeating that easily disproven lie over and over and all it does is substantiate my claim that you ARE a liar.

And Brain...

What is YOUR picture going to reveal...?!?!

Which beliefs would you care for them to comment on?

We've all had rounds on various "beliefs" at one time or another.

The difference between them and your cohorts in the Feeble Five is that at some points we can come to grips with each other.

> It's that whole double-standard thing, right?

Nope. It's that "we can come to an understanding" thing...

I thought you and I had one six or seven months ago, but it seems you weren't happy unless you were spreading more deceit.

Your rules. Ya gotta live by them, Brain.

What freq does his group hang out on?
Perhaps they should go to 14.313 as the un-confirmed 'reports' says the recent tornado in evansville has blown the "kooky jooish injun" off the air for the forseeable future. Oh well, one less ham radio nutcase to listen to on 20. Come to think of it I ain't heard the slack-jawed moron weed-whacker pilot from ga in a few weekends or his babbling cohort from mn either. Are they gone too? Come to think of it even the "great liberty net" was MIA from 75 meters last night also. What gives? Are they all droppin like flies in the fall season? I really missed hearing the Ypsilanti kookenschlong last evening. Ole gnq really is a class-1 fruitcake and a dyed-in-the-wool larouche supporter also who's elevator don't go to the top floors.
If you never heard him pontificate you're missing some great humor folks, nuttier than a nest of cukoo-cukoo birds on april the 1st.

Gee Does Stevei even reconize St Peter as a good (former or dead these days) person after all he lied about the Son Of God himself and to Stevie once a liar always a liar cuting the rest

nice post Brain just made the points I wanted and I will add as further proof of Stevie nutshood

"ere's A "Blast From The Past" Back In Markie's Lap! And He Wonders Why The Whole World Is Laughing At Him!"\

look at the title which is Stevies choice of words
I point out the phrase " The Whole World Is Laughing At Him!"

you know that has to be lie

If I am known to one tenth of one percent of the people of the US let alone the world, I would be deeply shcocked to learn this indeed the assine nature of this assertion by Stevie is one reason I often leave this title alone

Sorry I can answer that my knowledge of k4yz's on air antics are from having 6m metter contact with some of his victums/neightboors/target who describe him on air during a GOOD 6m opening as a "Papa Oscar Serria"

that is thelimit of my knowledge from any source I deem realaible about Mine? Did you lose track of who's who here? Or do you think that anyone who disagrees with you is the same person? It was Lloyd's erudition that was under your attack. (Those who attack their betters merely lower themselves further.)

That comment was meant for the posters who say people on Amateur Bands who do not wish to involve themselves with morse are lowly class CBers who seem to live in trailor parks and live off welfare and care nothing (scumbags in other words) It wasnt aimed directly at you it was put in as an "Also" to those who try to put that image over. Maybe I should have made it a bit clearer.

I have a float jacket hanging in my closet, not a 'cruise jacket'. I got it while I was on a Med float with the Sixth Fleet. That's 'Med' as in Mediterranian, not Medical. Go to Australia or Japan and you are on a 'West-Pac float', as in West Pacific. Etc. It's never referred to as a "cruise" because a cruise is a term of enlistment, as I said before.

Bad time is tacked onto the end of the enlistment. No enlistment time is "tied up". But after 18 years on active duty you knew that already, didn't you?

If you had been active duty then you would know the difference between a 'cruise' and a 'float'.

"inferred"..... actually, it should be "implied". But I implied nothing. I explicitly stated the nature of my contact with Oliver North (a Major at the time). You still seem to be under the impression that I can just email the Fox News Channel and he'll reply back like I

Yes I did, Dud..... because you were a Reservist, not an active duty Marine. And that's the -ONLY- way that could happen. Haven't you been paying attention?

It didn't prevent you from being a Reservist, and I made no such

You do, and for at least two reasons: 1) You make it your business to correct everyone else's grammar, and 2) You are compelled to press any issue that you think will discredit me and divert attention away from the fact that you are a very disturbed person.

Once again, Major Dud -- a medical discharge is a 'general' discharge, not an 'honorable' discharge. But if you have proof to the contrary (as well as proof that you were active duty for those 18 years) then

> (Was that "literate" enough for you, Frankie...?!?!)

Just holding you to your own standards.

>Steve "Weekend Warrior" Robeson, K4YZ

It really bugs you that a shitbird PFC earns an honorable discharge while you skated out on a medical discharge after 18 years, doesn't it? It must -really- irk you that the same shitbird PFC is tearing down the false-front you have built around your mediocre "career" as a Marine reservist. Well, that's your problem, Dud. Deal with it.

Big Lard Butt (BLB) was supposedly talking to Krazy Jewish Injun on 14.313 recently, but I couldn't hear the Evansville Elucidator, prolly cuz he be usin his "tornado special" paperclip antenna.

Liberty Net was on 3983 last night.

Sounds like cb did the trick. Hams can talk but not without repeaters when that happens.

1611. Building a Base CB Antenna ?

I would like to build a base antenna to mount outside on my home. I do not have a tripod and prefer not to use one unless I have to.
I will be running a 2950 or an older cobra with a small homebuilt (true RMS 50 watt)footwarmer.

Does anyone know of a good cheap homebuilt antenna I could make and get good transmit and receive ?
Thanks,
Raz

You could make a 1/4 wave pretty easy. Might be faster to find an old big stick antenna. They should be cheap. They worked OK, better than a 1/4 wave. You can mount it on a few house brackets on the side of your house using a 5 or 10 foot mast.
The link below is a frequency wavelength calculator. Scroll down and put your center frequency in the required field and click on 1/4, 1/2, 5/8, 3/4 or full wave.
It will tell you how long to make the antenna. Pretty cool.
Use GOOD coax!!!! NOT the thin stuff if your running a long run of coax.
Good luck.

what is the problem

you claiming you are the only one allowed to enage in smearing posts?

he doesn't even claim to be you is nobody named Steve allowed to be gay?

I was going to say... im hetrosexual but find the thought of a woman pissing on me a bit offputting to say the least. Is it a "Gay" thing or is it just a "Sicko" thing? Also the people who go on about men taking it up the butt seem to have no problem with women taking it up the butt. So its not an anal thing as such. Strange old world isnt it.

There is more than one Lloyd posting here. Only Wiseman continually thinks some guy named Lloyd in Alabama is the one and only Lloyd posting here. All one has to do is examine the properties of the post, but Wiseman, despite his correspondence Masters Degree

IT IS MY OPINION THAT... theres a difference between a cb'er who choses to join and amateur radio to improve his/her knowledge and capability with radio and a cb'er who choses to invade amateur bands just to have extra bands to play with and brings his/her 11m habits with him/her

If you are wanting a rather inexpensive antenna then try an inverted V antenna. Basically a center fed dipole with the ends lower than the feed point. Try to keep the apex angle between 90 and 120 degrees and feed with a balun.

The major drawback of this kind of antenna is that the radiation pattern is a figure 8 pattern. Max propogation direction is perpendicular to the plane of the antenna. Will work adequuately for both horizontal and vertical signals due to the slope of the arms.

IF you have room, you may also consider a phased array of quarter wave verticals. You can use between two and as many as 10 verticals to obtain all kinds of different patterns. Disadvantages of this system is that you must carefully measure and cut phasing lines. Also to make the system "steerable" you need a relay switching system. They relays need to be able to handle the power you plan to use.

There are other designs that also work and can be done rather inexpensively. At CB frequencies, a full wave loop is just at the extreme of size limitations for simple construction techniques. It also is not a bad antenna to use.

I suggest that you go to a library or obtain a copy of the Amature Radio Antenna Handbook. A good starting point.

I've had my ham ticket for a little over a decade, but never really used it. After this year's many hurricances and tornados I've gotten a little more into setting up communications and monitoring systems and read in one of the survivalism groups that some thing CB will be a power tool for communications in a crisis.

Then I think back to when I was 20 years old in my Jeep with the top down, and my CB radio installed and it just getting the worst possible range. I then thought I'd read up on it here, and found a posting by a gentlemen who traveled often in an RV and had the same problems. But still I hear of others who are getting into it, use skip, get miles and miles of range and so on.

So I have a little experience, and I realize that in a valley, a short mag-mount antenna, and poor wiring could ruin anything - but what if i throw an antenna into a tree, and what else can I do.

So I started to look more, and i started to find 40 channel radios (are there models with more or less?) and then 'export' radios, and SSB radios that can do 12w, while the regular 40 channel versions can only do 4w. I see antennas, but they are only 4 feet long - and I wonder if i can get an 8 or 12 foot mast to put up in a tree (as opposed to some of the other giants that my neighborhood assn will make me take down). I wonder if I can find a unit that scans, or information on ways to maximize reception and transmission, and if anyone uses the AM/FM models I've seen - or does everyone still just use AM?

Then I think - IS THERE A SITE THAT CAN TEACH ME THE BASICS?

If I head out to radio shack and buy their best model CB radio, where can I get a good antenna that I can put into a tree and use to listen to the highway that's 3 miles south of me? I see people mention K40, but their site is all about radar detectors, then I go to Wilson, and their stuff looks all mobile. In the end, I don't want to throw money away, and I don't want to have to buy something with 150w of illegal amps so they can hear me, when I probably won't be able to hear them back. Where can I shop? What is a good basic setup? How far off the ground? What kind of cable? All things I can answer with my ham knowledge, but I get lost when I hit a website about CB radio and see a 'freeband' unit with the actual frequency displayed and don't know if thats for me, or someone in Canada.

So I'm asking here - can someone tell me the basics, or where I can find them - so I can get started in this hobby and maximize my experience? Thanks.

My Firestik KW-7 is on the rear bumper of my Jeep. I use a TRC-451 sideband radio (actually an old Cobra 146) with an Astatic 636-L noise cancelling mike. It runs a 2x455 box. It's all you need.

CB is much like 10 meters. The same setups will work for 27, 28 and 29 megahertz. May I suggest some amateur books. Even the ARRL prints some good information. :)

50 ohm coax cable. Stay away from cheap crimped on ends.

I tried to build a few antennas for CB. Too big to deal with.

2 meters antennas are small, portable and get good gain.
Plus, the range on VHF-FM is incredible. 50 watts will talk farther then 120 watts of sideband on CB.
(not including skip, tropo or other enhancements)

Look in your library in 621.384 A.

I thought I would inquire on the FCC sit about the problems using a CB while traveling through Indianapolis as well as some other places.
It seems you have to make a written complaint about each specific person or business and general location.
I guess some Lobbyists have insulated "Businesses" that advertise on Channel 19, as well as all other CB Channels, impossible from prosecution. If someone in this area around exit 4 off I65 would take the time to identify, in writing, to the FCC where or who these Businesses are, he would do everybody a great favor.

Hi! You refer a person to a prescription drug and say it is your professional medical opinion that they take it, and then you say that you are not practicing medicine.

I use a non-medical term, "crazy" and "nuts" and you claim I am making a medical diagnosis.

How double of you.

Mopey was spoiled by his mommy when he was a kid, he would cry in stores for toys and candy, she would buy them. That is why he is such a ruined little whiner. His frustration shows. Go into almost any NG he has posted in and see how he acts. Just like in rrcb. A moronic turd and a truckstop queen, thats mopeythetic.

and stop cross posting this dribble. I kill filed you under two other nyms, now you re-appear under this one, that in itself means that you are purposely trying to by-pass

I originally KF'd you because you try to talk like someone with an education, but yet you have seemed to forgotten some of the basic spelling and grammar skills that most 6th graders learned. Either you don't know how to use spell-check on you're computer or you don't know what a dictionary is, no matter what, you are nothing more than some sort of self flattering troll with illusions of grandeur.
Just stick with one nym , if Steveo wants to keep busting your chops by responding, fine, but I myself have no desire to see some of the worst grammar since I was in grade school.

Hello Richard. Your honest request kind of of set me back a few steps. The basic laws of physics don't know the difference between Amateur Radio and CB. So the principles needed to get your license, apply here. I'm looking at your question more as "How did the radio community fail in not providing you the knowledge needed to answer the questions of basic radio theory" That is what was supposed to happen when you achieved your licensing.
Elmering in the Ham Bands along with here on the CB bands has fallen into a catagory of a "lost art". I get many questions presented to me on the basics, which I initially thought should be part of a basic skill set to get on the air. What I have observed is that we as a culture have turned to a plug and play society in which the theories used are not needed to make things work.
So not to soapbox this question, I'd turn back to your ARRL handbook and start Google'ing for answers. There are an infinate amount of experts out here on the web that are willing to answer specifics. Glean those answers and do a web search on the specific subject to gain a broader perspective and knowledge.
BTW, as with many on here, I'm a ham also and a hold a General Radiotelphone license.
Best of luck on your quest.

Whish is firmly where the responsibility is meant to lay. The Licensee is the one responsible for the correct operation of his station at all times.
If he is not physically present, it is his/her responsibilty to ensure that OK, I should have been more clear I guess...

When I look at the rules for CB I see a 4w AM limit and a 12w SSB limit (correct anything I say that is incorrect please). Then I think to myself... 'I can't do anything with 4 watts'.

But thats the local VHF/UHF side of me - so then I move on to trying to think HF - which is hard for me to do because I'm a no-code tech who's about to start studying for his general ticket. I have never had an HF communication or a long distance communication that didn't involve a repeater... but I think to myself 'ok, well, i need a good antenna and a good rig, and a good setup (which is hard to do since I live at the bottom of a hill, but I'm willing to try)... and then I'll just start going through frequencies. But there are only a few CB's that seem to scan, so am I just going to sit there and spin the knob until I hear someone?

I guess I'm gunshy. When I set up my GMRS equipment for use between friends and family around the city, we had to use 35+ watts to get decent signals from one to another, and I'm concerned that my 4 watt CB will have no ability and just cost me wasted money.

I do have a PRO-2066 scanner that can receive CB (just learned that last night) and I plan to put the CB channels in with the Ham repeaters to see what I hear. I guess I'll start there.

Thanks, any other comments are appreciated.

Yes, I agree with you whole heartedly but many older Hams refer to "both" as simply CB'ers. This "will" upset genuine CB radio operators, and those who did advance to Amateur from CB, as many full licence Hams dont seem able to distinguish between the two, or dont want to distinguish... thats the problem.
Also the point still stands that a few, if not lot of problems on Amateur bands could be down to kids going on their parents equipment while they are out. There are lots of possibilitys but the CB'er gets it in the neck all the time.

Not absolutely correct. Correct in some instances but i know lots of people on 11 meter who go on SSB (illegaly of course) who treat it sensibly and dont mess about. Many 11 meter users, especially the SSB users, have reasonably good control on the airwaves even to the point of writing a log and QSL'ing. These are CB'ers im talking about by the way, not Amateurs although I know a couple of Amateurs who used to join in occasionally (using their pirate call signs of course)

Maybe not to the point of disconnecting his/her equipment but at least bringing up their kids to be respectful of things. I would personally put a lock on the "shack" door so I could secure the room but some people have them in their living room so sometimes I guess its asking for trouble. My CB is in my office and also one in my repair "shack" and when I go out I make sure both are locked. If I can do it for CB why cant they do it with their Amateur kit... which is far more valuable in any case. Mind you, some adults cant even be arsed to secure their guns but thats a different story.....

not exactly or only in theory the Ham is responible for the use of his equipement, but when was the last time the FCC tried to bust a ham for say someone breaking into his car and using the equipment

In addition some modes can be used without the ham being present at all

My car for example will transmit an APRS signal at intervals anytime the engine is running, unless I turn it off each time I turn on the engine. This allows me to kow where the body thing is if my old man calls back to house and tells me he is lost, or if I found the car missing and knew none of had it I could tell the cops where to go find

Hello again Richard,
Don't let the thought of 4 / 12 Watts discourage you. From my experiences, one can easily achieve 20 miles base to base on AM and 30 plus on sideband with a descent antenna setup. The CB frequencies were set aside for short range communications. The only problem is that part of the spectrum is prone to HF progagational effects which allow for long distance communications... (Though illegal over 149.9 miles (No flames please)). With that said, Antenna.... antenna... antenna is your biggest bang for the dollar. Your location also can play a major factor in how far you can get. And like with the VHF/UHF bands, you can improve things with using a higher grade of coax and connectors. I have traditionally used 9913 or LMR-400 for most of my communication setups. Try to get the most signal from the antenna back to the transmitter. Your going to here individuals with hoped up units and amplifiers which is an easy way to get out further. But a rule thumb that works for myself is that you can talk to someone if you can't hear them. Hoped up radios and amplifiers don't address this. I currently run a small beam on an old SBE Console V. With 12 watts (SSB), I'm easily covering 4 counties around me.
Experiment around and ask questions from the locals around you.

Cheers

Dungeon Master

I would disagree, people filled with hate or pervy intentions hide behind a religion.
Calling somthing a religion or using the name of a well established religion can provide a certain level of protection.
Those in the religion will see the person as "one of their own" and refuse either to see them for what they are, risk the reputation of the religion or turn on "one of their own" by allowing them to be caught.

Religion is not the cause, it is one shield that some scumbags hide behind. Others hide behind reputable professions, such as police or government positions. But that does not make those professions the cause, simply a hiding place.
How much more protection can you get than being within a government, who can put out a gagging order in the name of "national security" to cover your ass.

> As for the Jehovas it was them in the olden days who used to walk around

Not as gullible as than the idiots who believed it, sitting around and waiting for the World to end on a certain date. Considering that those in the religion are worked at over a long period of time, but other people simply see messages and believe them.

How about that con man who had people believing he was a spy, sent to protect them. Some people are more susceptible to suggestion and NLP than others, but I believe that most can be had with enough time and effort.

Or, what about the story of WMDs and links to terrorists that a war was based on. How many people actually believed that we were about to be attacked by Iraq?

Peter.

Since when has the FCC had jurisdiction over radio amateurs in the UK?
British regulations are different to that in the UK.

Dudly just can't stand it if someone else uses "his" medical terms. :-)

Like Dud has been all through pre-med, done his internship, and written up in JAMA and Lancet. Probably got an old, used copy of "Physicians' Desk Reference" out of a recycle waste can...

Dudly has NOT PRODUCED A SINGLE REFERENCIBLE PROOF of his military or medical expertise claims in SEVEN YEARS here. Here's what we HAVE and all found by OTHERS:

1. State of Tennessee website listing of state licenses for medical people. Just a name, address, and title of "LPN," an acronym for Licensed Practical Nurse.

2. A no-longer visible description of one "brigade" of the TN STATE Guard describing that "brigade's" "communications officer," a "First Lieutenant Robeson" with a picture of him in field utility uniform cammies scowling into the camera.

3. A text mention of a TN CAP unit mentioning their "communications officer," "Captain Robeson," but no photo of him.

ALL the rest that's on the Internet was supplied by Dudly himself, written by him, no third or disinterested party. See his self-styled "Man of Many Talents" AOL home page. See his QRZ bio and picture in a flight suit (which could be bought at a surplus or used clothing store).

Dudly has supplied NO OTHER LIVING RADIO AMATEUR'S NAMES/ CALLSIGNS except that of his "wife" that could be contacted for verification on identity/personality/behavior/etc. He apparently knows no one else except the correspondents in newsgroups.

Dudly has used WRONG references to USMC slogans, jargon, and terms that would be familiar to any active-duty USMC veteran. Dudly has NEVER mentioned ANY piece of avionics equipment used on USMC aircraft either by official nomenclature or familiar name during his alleged 18-year "avionics tech career" in the USMC. That's unheard of in a work environment that is state-of-the-art in electronics; his mentions of aircraft could have been cribbed out of some book on aviation or a website for same. The ONLY radio equipment Dudly has mentioned relative to his "military career" is some alleged MARS radios used at an Okinawan MARS station where he claimed an "ANCOIC" position. MARS operations would NOT be a part of the duties of any avionics technician, any branch, and MARS operations do not involve either tactical or strategic radio communications of the U.S. military, any branch.

>Seven hostile actions, my ass!

Dudly's "hostile actions" in the Corps were probably the cause of HIS termination from the USMC after 18 years, not the 20 needed for a military pension. Dudly ORIGINALLY posted that he received a MEDICAL discharge...then tried to say that was "changed" to an Honorable...then later switched to say that he was terminated "due to an accident during his duty." The claim of being in "seven hostile actions" came much later than his claims - and claims switches - of his discharges. A terrible record of INCONSISTENCY which smacks of a typical con man snow job trying to be foisted on everyone.

Medical discharges are done for mental conditions as well as physical conditions.

Looney Toons time. BTW, Warner Brothers main buildings are just about three miles away from my residence. I don't think they would accept Dudly's tales, even for the most outrageous cartoon show they could make. For a Halloween horror film, maybe...

Note the characteristic Dudly "response." Instead of providing REAL PROOF FOR HIMSELF, Dudly attempts to shift focus in the thread by engaging in personal insults of yourself. That's a typical diversionary tactic in these back-and-forths with Major Dud. [great name, Frank! :-)]

Brian, just bid Major Dud a "Semper Paratus" and a "Temper Fry" and forget trying to reason with him. He isn't reasonable. He's nuts.

Inverted V antennae are not so bad. I tend to agree that a full wave loop is a bit large at CB frequencies to manage, doable if you have patience.

Quite true.

>++++<(not including skip, tropo or other enhancements)

First impression on this statement makes me a bit weary as to its validity as a general statement. Especially if you are considering line of sight communications.

In a more specific case it may very well be so. Trying to make a general statement that "x" power output at "y" frequency yields better distance than "w" power at "z" frequency may not always be true. The major effects on communication distance is determined primarily by transmitter and reciever antenna hieghts. Given equal antennae hieght for both bands, and equal gain, then one can better compare distance versus power.

It maybe true in your case. It may not be true in all cases.

I have a phantom amplifier on my bench. It has 12 6LQ6 toobs in it. I would like a schematic for the thing before I get too far into it. Owner said it went "POP". I could probably give it a go without schematic, but I don't do this kind of gear very often.

Ok, thanks for link.
When my co-worker first gave me unit to check out I thought it was a homebrew. Kinda ratty inside.

Design looks a little shaky too. I was surprised at low plate voltage and also so many tubes in parallel.

Schematic references bandswitch. I don't see much in the way of a bandswitch so I guess maybe that was just some kinda smokescreen for the benifit of the feecee.

thanks for info

LOL. That reminds me of a bit of research I did. I have a dog that needed to be on a low protein diet. After reading the dog food bags at the store they all seemed to have the same ingredients. I then did some web searching and found how dog food was made. It will truly make you sick.

Mounting (ground mount with 3 radials on 20-40-80M) the antenna was easy. Tuning is was a bitch. I missed the portion of the directions on tuning the antenna, because it was poorly placed. Almost hidden-like. Anyway, I tuned it backwards 80M and down. I got it pretty close. Then the next day, I tuned it 10M and up. All was fine except for 20M, which was about 2.0 across the band. So I called up Hustler-Newtronics, and the tech immediately sent me a 20M calibration sheet. Worked like a charm. I have all the bands well under 2, and 80M is 1.2 at the center General frequency, and I get about 80Khz bandwidth before my SWR goes to 3.0. That is excellent for 80M.

Also, for the price of $170, the construction is rock solid. If I were to build my own antenna like this, it just wouldn't come out as good.

Steve, one other thing. You asked about ground mount. Seems that ground mount is fine for the lower freq like 20-40-80. But I compared it to my Imax on 10M, and the Imax blew it away for local. Of course, the Imax is about 36 feet off the ground.

I've seen quite a few of those ground mounted deals over the years so they must work ok down there. That's a neat antenna.

No problem on 40 and 80. I made one 20M contact. I haven't tried it that much on 20, because I only go the SWR down yesterday. Based on construction and hardware, I don't think you can beat this. Similar verticals are $500-600. And as far as the people on this site that advocate building your own, I don't think you can do it for that same price, and with that quality. I know I can't, because I don't have a collection of metal machining tools. I can send you the instructions, in case you want to buy one. Theyrecommend 3 mounts:

1. Best - elevated mount on a roof ot tower with radials

2. Good - ground mount with radials

3. Least desireable - ground mount without radilas

Now, one thing I forgot to mention. I have 3 radials, they say use at least 2, but more the merrier. I mounted it in a swamp, so the soil is always wet. I think there is good conductivity, and that is helping the counterpoise.

Oh, I don't think of rednecks as insulting. I think of them as country boys.
Many rednecks are actually proud of being rednecks. I kind of think of them as their own nationality.

There were different versions of the Phantoms over the years.
Some had twelve tubes. Some had ten. I believe if you have a twelve tuber it is an early version.

I don't remember seeing the band switch on early versions either, but I can remember them on the Phantoms of the late seventies.

amps are for sale only to licensed amatuer radio operators on the

I was on my CB last night. I used sideband and some AM. I also made a quick 2 meter contact. The noise level on 11 meters started out quiet, got up to about 3db, then dropped back down an hour later. About the time the static went up, there was a bit of DX. Not-so-local signals were wavering a bit.

My 2 meter contact was only a few miles. It was the last radio I used. Tuesday nights are 11 meter SSB net nights.

If you're in the mid-atlantic area, try 36LSB at 1930EST.
There are check-ins from MD, PA, DC, VA and DE. We don't get west because there are mountains in the way.

I tried something that I have never seen before, at least here in NovaScotia. Take a 2 section type big stick and put two top whips on it at 90 degrees from each other. Made an extremely low SWR over 26 to 28 MHZ. I used a metal bracket to hold the whips on.
It will look like an inverted V but with a big stick bottom section.

Inverted Vs made of wire is what the CBers use around here in apartments.
They thumb-tack them to the wall.

I live in a deed restricted community where CB antennas are not permitted to be erected. I need a low profile antenna - one that will not bring attention to the homeowners association. I want something better than an indoor antenna. I was thinking about one that I can just put out on the grass in my backyard like on a ground plane or something. I want to talk. Any ideas?

I second that motion. Use Bury-Flex cable to the tree. Not only can it be buried, critters will not chew on it, and it is a top quality cable with very low loss.

Use 100% shielded coax like Belden 9913 or equiv, to minimize TVI

Or if you want to build it yourself:

Or calculate here using 27.200 MHz as a center frequency http://www.scanshack.com/antcal.htm#dipole or

http://home.att.net/~wizardoz/cbmw/antenna_fabri.html

Coax Cable Vertical CB Antennas

For a quickie CB antenna, a vertical dipole (1/2) wave can be made right from the coax itself You take your coax and very carefully, without nicking the braided shield, strip 102 inches of the outer insulation jacket off one end. After removing the outer jacket, start bunching the shield down the coax from the end. Now, where the outer jacket and the shield meet, separate the braided shield enough to get the inner conductor out through the hole in the braid. Pull all of the inner conductor through and stretch it and the braid out. Be careful not to skin any of the insulation off the inner conductor. Now attach an antenna insulator to the end of the inner conductor. Measure the braided shield. Cut it off at about 106" and attach an antenna insulator to the end. The total length of the inner and outer conductor should be about 17 feet (1/2 wave). You can haul it up to any height you want with a string or rope attached to the insulator on the center conductor. It's a good idea to coat the end of the coax cable where it separates with some kind of waterproof sealer. This keeps water from seeping into the coax, which could cause a high SWR.

Just attach a coax connector on the end of the coax going to your transceiver and you are on the air. The SWR should be 1.5 or better, if cut to the proper length. It'll get out about as good as a ï¿½ wave ground plane CB radio antenna if you get it up high and in the clear. Do not hoist this antenna up next to a metal pole, because the metal will interfere with the antenna's operation and cause a high SWR.

Yep, different versions over the years.

Still need the schematic if anybody has a link. I'll get it running w/o schematic - I hope. but would be nice to have.

I'm sure it's the 'older version' It has a 12AQ5 for the first stage.
Second stage is 4 of them sweep toobs, and third stage is another 8 6LQ6 sweeps.

Yes, looks major homebrew. Three transformers with their secondaries wired in parallel. They used solid green wire to wire the whole thing up. One kludge after another, but I'm sure they did the trick as far as making big signals.

HV relay was stuck. Will have to clean it up or find another.
The KA14DY-110dc relay looks like it might be a tad expensive to replace. I'll check with the boss and see if he has anything to kludge in

I just ripped out that hokey preamp. The guy who owns the thing said all it did was amplify the static anyway.

Thanks for comments and links. Schematic while not being exact will be of great help.

Wrong, buttmunch. If it works between 24 and 35 mhz out of the box

50 watts to drive it, it is illegal for sale in the USA. Look up your

He has self-admitted never being injured in the USMC, got sand in his eye once.

He has self-admitted to receiving therapy some time on or about his discharge. He never said that it was physical therapy, but said he was "rehabilitated."

He gives a whole new meaning to "Scared Straight."

The 12AQ5 if I remember correctly is for the keying circuit, not for amplification.

Triple stage refers to three power modes. Four tubes driving eight, Eight tubes only, or all 12 tubes at once.

Are they mature trees? Do they have leaves all year? They can be made of quite thin wire! It's best to use a balun at the feedpoint to keep feedline radiation down. Mine was a vertical with the top anchored to the tree and the bottom weighted. I used a rope to pick the feedline off and it was quite inconspicous. The Imax on the other hand is not but cannot be seen off the property, albeit I live in the sticks :) It had to be somewhat wife-friendly, hence the bruy flex :)

Are you looking to talk to locals or DX talking?

I think you might be misunderstanding the meaning of a "ground plane" antenna...

You might be able to get away with a vertical dipole. You could attach the dipole to a corner of the house, running it along a vertical seam (and AWAY from any downspouts) so that it would be less noticeable. Feedline can be concealed beneath siding in many instances.

Basically your antenna will consist of two pieces of wire (insulated, please, other than that it's not important what type) that are 104 inches in length. One wire will be attached to the center conductor of your coax, the other to the braid. Arrange the wires so they are in a "T" configuration in relation to the feedline. Hang the antenna so that the wires are in the vertical plane. It's as simple as that.

Major Dudly Dumshit has NEVER ONCE mentioned specific radio

Tsk, Frank Gilliland and I live roughly a thousand miles apart.
Even though my wife and I have a house in the Puget Sound area of Washington, Spokane is quite a bit farther east from Kitsap County and nearby Tacoma.

"Cross-dressing?" Dudly apparently is fixated on SEX now,

Frank Gilliland was IN the USMC. Dudly is a WANNABE.

Frank and I disagree on Dudly. I say Dud was NEVER IN. Frank says he was in but as a Reservist.

I have others NOT on this newsgroup who are Marines (but not on active duty) and who I've known for years. Frank's lingo

Until I mentioned it years ago (DD-214), I don't think Dudly KNEW what it was! Hans did, you did, even Larry Roll. No-servers like Miccolis and Kelly wouldn't have known, no problem there.

Meanwhile, Frank and I will continue to argue on Dudly's REAL "service", disagreeing only in a minor way.

Dudly ought to change his "sign off" to Semper Pirate-us. :-)

Sheesh Lennie, are you not even going to make this even REMOTELY places, etc were not information from which you could obtain references...?!?!

You're depending on Frankie of Silliland for your refrences, Lennie.

Not very wise for an alleged engieenr to use corrupted data to make decisons from, now is it...?!?!

Frankie was in the USMC for one infraction-infested enlsitment.

I'd take "suggestions" from him about the USMC like I would get Almost close to the truth, Lennie, but again, just side-swiped.

MARS operation IS "part of the duties" of a MARINE who holds the proper b-billet MOS.

I held that MOS. Reported here before.

"Real proof" HAS been submitted.

Frankie of Silliland screwed up by making suggestions that he had great "insider" resources, yet can't seem to cross reference SNCO promotion boards and other meaningful USMC references...

Probably because, like you, he's a pathological liar.

Sorry that was 10 years ago the persons have moved on. I would say to start at 9 feet each and cut both down using a good SWR meter and a cheap CB radio until you get the SWR low. Remember at 90 degrees from each other. The thinner the wire the shorter it will be.

My emphasis follows:

"UNIFORMS IN THE CORPS ARE NEVER ISSUED "FREE OF CHARGE", ASSIGNED DUTIES OR NOT"...Frank Gilliland

Let's find out.

> It might be possible that Steve was assigned to guard the Tomb of the > Unknown Soldier. They probably make a special allowance for uniforms > there.

Yoiu can bet they do, Brain, but the Tomb of the Unknowns is not guarded by Marines.

Here's an idea for The Feeble Five, Brain and Frankie especially:

Pick up your local telephone book. Look under "US Government".
Under "Armed Forces" you'll find a USMC Recruiter. Tell him/her you're "doing a paper" about uniforms of the Armed Forces.

Read back Frankie's assertion about uniforms NOT being issued "...'free of charge', assigned duties or not..." Ask him/her to validate that as correct or not.

Ask the Recruiter how much he or she had to pay for his/her Dress
Blues when they were assigned the billet.

Then ask them how much Marines are billed for their first seabag of uniforms in boot camp. (Remember, Frankie said Marines are NOT issued UNIFORMS free of charge, assigned duties or not...)

Ask him/her if Marines in Iraq were required to buy the desert cammies. The same ones they are required to have in-theater along with all sewn-on name tags, etc. (Remember, Frankie said UNIFORMS...Not any one type or style...)

Ask him/her if MY assertion about B-Billet assignments (Drill Instructor, I&I duty, Eighth and I Street/HQMC, Embassy Duty, etc) rating an issue of dress blues is true or not.

Youse guys up to it?

Or how about a letter addressed directly to HQMC? Surely you can take the above suggestions and pare them into a letter that sounds as if you're conducting some sort of research. Better yet, I think I'll do that part. Then we can compare notes.

Brain...at this point you can just ease out if you want to and I'll let you call it "even"...Like I said, it's not wise taking "counsel" about USMC policy from a one-tour, twice court martialed, self-proclaimed " ####bird PFC " idiot.

I understand you that were caught up in the heat of the moment, but I don't believe that even you're so foolish as to continue the "argument" in the face of reliable, third party corroboration of my "claims".

I wonder how Frankie will slither out from under THIS rock!

Steve, K4YZ

PS: If you're REALLY adventurous, you might even ask about the "civilian" business suits/sports blazers issued to Marines in some Embassies and/or other sensitive assignments as an "alternative uniform". I am willing to bet Dave saw one or two of these guys/gals over the years!

Vinnie S recommended the Dipole in the link below. The only thing is I dont know if it can it be used outdoor. Its insulated so I dont see why it cant be.

http://cgi.ebay.com/Indoor-Dipole-CB-Radio-Antenna-hide-it_W0QQitemZ5828831770QQcategoryZ48692QQssPageNameZWDVWQQrdZ1QQcmdZViewItem

Im thinking that I would install it on my roof toward the back of the house in the "T" configuration as you recommend tying the ends down to the sides of the house like in the eaves under the garage. Then Im thinking to run the coax back on either side of the Dipole, down the corner of the house where it will go into the house. It will be out of the sight of the home owners association people.

You can use it outdoors, easily. You must seal the coax feed so water and ice don't get in at the feed point. It is perfectly ok if either leg of the dipole gets wet.

Also, like Chad said, make a balun, which is a coiling your coax right before the feed point. The coax should be coiled 10 turns in a 6 inch radius. And use 100% sheilded coax. I use Davis Bury-flex. LMR-400 is good, but very stiff. Belden 9913 is good, but not as good outdoors as the Bury-Flex.

If you was to save some money, just use the coax itself as the dipole. Once you separate the center wire from the braid, that is the star of you dipole. That needs to be about 102-104 inches long. The center wire is easy, but separating the braid is a pain in the ass. So cut about 1 inched of braid, and solder a wire to the braid, like 14 gauge from Home Depot. Remember, the length should be cut long, and then cut shorter to match up and get low SWR. Is alwasy easier to cut shorter, and to make longer.

If you have a adjoining houses, I would advice to not hang the antenna on the house, as you might cause TVI. I would hang it on the tree. Even it it is only 10 feet from the house.

I agree. Anyone who wants to know the truth should do just as you suggest.

They pay the same price as any other Marine.

Judas Holy Roller Priest..... you didn't even go through boot camp!!!! The very first day (when you are standing on the yellow footprints) you are given a book of chits that are used to buy everything you need, including your uniforms. The money that is spent from that book of chits is deducted from your paycheck. My "chit book" started at about $210, and there was about $30 left that was added to my check when I left San Diego.

Shit, you weren't even a reservist. You are a complete Dud.

Yep. Still got mine with my name stamped on the back and a target (flag) sewn on the sleeve from when I was on float with the 24th MAU.

Yep. Cammies, alphas, charlies, dress blues..... you gotta pay for all of them.

Behold he shall ride upon a hard dick and his name shall be Lloyd Austin Davies.

And it came to pass that the king of knob jobs in Alabama, (as Lloyd is known) was gone for a long time, and some of the people celebrated and some speculated that he had died, some speculated that he was ill, some speculated that he was in Maryland at Ray Chason's apartment, and some even thought that the king of knob jobs in Alabama had been made a sex slave by Ray Chason and his butt buddies. It was then the people started to rejoice.

And when the niggers and crackheads heard the murmuring and rumours of the people they assured them that the king of knob jobs in Alabama was just busy sucking on one of his nigger neighbors big black dick and would address the people as soon as he could swallow that big load if nigger jizz. The neighbors in his hud apartment complex also knew that the project was the sucking of nigger dicks and telling lies and more lies, but they did not tell the people this for they did not desire to have a vice squad nightmare in the city of Deliverance Extras. Alabama liked to hear about the fat retarded one who proclaimed he was the king of knob jobs in Alabama.

And the niggers and crackheads reassured the people that everything was all right, and told them to prepare pyres and to cook meat, and to ice down beer and nehi soda, and to go out and buy potato chips and other unhealthy snacks from the traders who had immigrated to the kingdom from vietnam and the land of gaza. and so the went down to these little stores owned and bought these things. and they went home and warmed up their tv's, for the sabbath approached and the sabbath would bring more action from the mediocre football team at u of alabama, and the sabbath would bring plenty of exciting nob gobbling action and goo gobbling from the king of knob jobs in Alabama.

The king of knob jobs in Alabama in reality is a ghastly pale porker who stands only 5'6" and weighs an unhealthy 290 Lbs. His skin is as white as copying paper due to his night job of delivering pizzas to the ghetto neighborhood where he dwells in a filthy, roach infested hud hovel. He doesn't venture outside during the daylight hours, instead preferring to play with star trek and dalek dolls, post lies and filth on the internet and jack off and dream of finally actually getting some pussy. Not stick pussy which his homosexual lover Steve Holsten feeds him several times a year when Lloyd goes for his visits, usually around Thanksgiving.

Lately, the king of knob jobs in Alabama has been consumed with posting pictures of someone he says is Roger Wiseman. In fact, the obviously botched purple rendering of somebody else has been cut and pasted, photoshopped and distributed all over the internet by the king of knob jobs in Alabama and his homosexual fantasy lover Ray Chason who is the king of knob jobs in Maryland. Chason who is also a porker has set up a blog of Roger's ex-wife "Regina" telling even more lies. Roger wasn't ever married to anyone named Regina. Of course Chason and Lloyd refuse to let truth get in the way of their lies, like their butt buddy friends who post lies, lies and more lies about anybody who reveals the truth about this band of homosexual predators.

Well at 27 MHz one is still plagued with atmospheric noise such as lightning and manmade noise. In most instances it will overcome teh galactic noise from beyond the atmosphere. At 2 M and above galactic noise is more prominent but at considerable lower levels than the sky noise at 11M. Around 20G or so comics rays become a noise source.

Also FM has advnatages in reception in that most noies has amplitude components that are averaged out in FM detection. The major noise that FM has to overcome is the thermal noise generated within the receiver.

My copy of MCO P10120.28G (Individual Clothing Regulations) dated 08 Jul 05 says:

"2000. INTRODUCTION. Reference (f) directs the services to provide enlisted service members with all uniforms required for wear. Initially, this requirement is met by issuing all recruits the Initial Clothing Allowance (commonly known as the "sea bag") at recruit training. Marine recruits are issued required uniforms, t-shirts, shorts, and sweat suits; free of charge.
This chapter contains a listing of the Initial Clothing Allowance (seabag) issue and other authorized clothing allowances, issues, and entitlement criteria.
Allowances are gratuitous, i.e. at government expense. Authorized personnel do not pay for allowances, neither directly nor via pay checkage."

Seems pretty clear to me that the initial "sea bag" issued at MCRD is "free of charge".

> Ask him/her if MY assertion about B-Billet assignments (Drill > Instructor, I&I duty, Eighth and I Street/HQMC, Embassy Duty, etc) > rating an issue of dress blues is true or not.

That would come under the heading of a supplementary clothing allowance. MCO P10120.28G has this to say about that.

"2008. SUPPLEMENTARY CLOTHING ALLOWANCES. Supplementary clothing allowances are additional/extra clothing allowances authorized to enlisted personnel when they are assigned to a tour of duty that requires extra clothing for the performance of such duty. Supplementary clothing allowances are additional quantities or special items of uniform clothing not required by the majority of other enlisted personnel. Organizational clothing should also be considered as a means for providing additional, mission-specific uniform clothing, per chapter 7 of this Manual. Supplementary clothing allowances may not exceed 20 percent of the Initial Clothing Allowance established by the Assistant Secretary of Defense (ASD(FMP))."

As an example of a supplementary allowance, recruiters are issued a supplementary allowance. MCO P10120.28G describes the procedure thusly:

"(3) The Recruiters Blue Uniform Allowance will be issued to students immediately upon successful completion of the Recruiters School, MCRD, San Diego. When transfer orders are received and special measurement clothing is required, the clothing officer will forward the requisition and appropriate measurements to DSCP requesting that the special measurement clothing be forwarded to the CO of the organization to which the individual was transferred."

Note that the recruiter is not issued a check to buy the items, but the clothing officer actually ORDERS the clothing items from the Defense Supply Center, Philadelphia (DSCP). DCSP sends the items to the Marine at his new (recruiting) post.

To conserve bandwidth, I'll not give other examples (like 8th & I, etc.), but all instances follow this same pattern --- the initial issue of a required uniform is gratuitous in every case, without any pay checkage or "chit" required from the Marine.

Cash payment IS required for replacement of issued uniform items, and Marines are paid a monetary yearly "maintenance allowance" on the anniversary of their enlistment.

We were given a monthly clothing allowance and it wasn't much -- just a few dollars each month.

If you want to make a case then post the regs that were in effect at the time in question.

Hey Hans. When you go down to the Legion Hall to spin your war stories, do you wear your uniform? Do you pin large medals to it, or do you just pin the ribbons on it?

No, they were NOT different, except for the one-and-only part you DID get right...INITIALLY Marines only received a monthly allowace for MAINTENANCE of uniforms.

In the early 80's.

The "regs" that Hans, K0HB quoted are almost the same as those in force "back then".

A quick phone call or letter to HQMC can verify the changes.

In the mean time, get a hankie and wipe the blood off your nose.

Don't need luck -- just google "chit-book" and "MCRD". You will get a Sorry, Frankie. Still a loser.

The FACT remains that Marines are NOT charged for initial outfittings of uniforms, to include Dress Blues, when assigned to certain duties, including I & I duty.

I'm hoping to run an EM27 base station and am wondering what I need with regard to a transformer to drop the voltage to the 13.8V required. £ is definately a major factor in the decision - the thought of using an old 12v doorbell transformer crossed my mind but the 1A output is probably a tad low for a CB. Anybody bought one recently? Would very much welcome any suggestions.

Many thanks

A doorbell transformer will probably destroy your cb because you need DC power.
A simple transformer gives AC only.
I assume you are in UK?
For 4 watts legal power on FM you will need at least 2 amperes at 13,8 volts.
A real good power supply is needed.
Nothing else will work well.
Take one that will be able to give 7 or 9 amps out if you want to run a President George or Lincoln or another CB with up to 50 watts out one day.

In AF basic training, I was issued a full complement of uniforms, many of them uniforms that were about to be phased out. On my one year anniversary, I began receiving a clothing maintenance allowance that didn't begin to cover the cost of uniforms that "went out" that first year. The mess dress uniform was never an issue item, and the service dress was always appropriate to wear at formal functions.

The AF Reserves attend basic training same place I went. They were issued a full complement of uniforms as well. After training, when a uniform item becomes "unserviceable" due to wear and tear or being phased out, the unserviceable item is brought to clothing issued and replaced at no cost. That includes shoes and boots. It did not include optional items such as wrinkle free(polyester) slacks, Corfam dress shoes, etc.

I said that it was possible that there are situations where new uniforms are given, guarding the Tomb of the Unknown could be an example where uniforms are kept beyond merely "serviceable."

USN wear uniforms. USNR wear uniforms. USMC wear uniforms. USMCR wear uniforms. USA wear uniforms. USAR wear uniforms. USAF wear uniforms. USAFR wear uniforms. CAP wear uniforms. Tennessee Militia/Guard wear uniforms.

That you did not guard the Tomb is your problem. Given as many services uniforms you managed to wiggle into over the years, guessing what service's uniform you may be wearing on any given day of the week is not my problem, either.

You do your own homework, phone calling, and letter writing campaign.

Dud NEVER got that DD-214. He can't show what he doesn't have.

In Dudly's wildly irrational mind, that probably is taken as "proof" that he "really did those things." :-(

Under the circumstances I cited before? You're right.

They pay NOTHING. Not one thin dime.

Not one dime was deducted from my pay for ANY uniform issue, Frankie.

Not one dime.

And those "chits" you refer to were used for PERSONAL items such as shaving cream, razors, deodorant (which you obvioulsy squandered) writing paper, etc. No "pay" was issued until you graduated boot camp.
THAT was the money deducted from your pay, Silliboy.

NOT "uniform issues".

Nope. Not a dime...Oh, I guess we could reeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeally stretch things and say that by virtue of my income taxes and that portion appropriated to the defense budget, I "bought" my uniforms.
But then so did every other taxpayer in the United States, whether they served in the Armed Forces or not.

Only if they want to keep one as a momento.

Otherwise they are issued: "organizational equipment" And that "organizational equipment" has to be returned.

Oh, there'll be no "headers", Frankie. This one can go by parcel post with a real human being's signature on it. Any fifth grader with a bit of "computer smarts" could dummy-up a fake e mail.

Well, THERE WE HAVE IT!

Frankie's finally got to the "just mow 'em over with profanity" mode.

Sorry, PFC! You have been busted at your own game over and over for the past few weeks.

This time with blood drawn. And the blood was yours.

Uh huh...riiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiight.

So..we have your loss of patience in the form of profanity and now a not-so-thinly-veilied threat of physical violence.

It took some patience of my own, but we've brought Frankie of

I have a DD-214. Mine says "Honorable" on it...Not "Less than Honorable", "General" or any other release other than "Honorable". No charges, lost time, or any form of judicial proceedings against me.
Honorable.

I can't stress how important impedence matching is to your antenna system.
I'd rather have a 1.5:1 resonant SWR then 1:1 unresonant SWR. Think about singing in the shower. There is a pitch that sings back to you with very little power. That is what happens in a resonant antenna. Recieved signals also get this natural amplification. Frequency is unimportant to this theory.

Nope...but I was on 08 July 1975...And 08 July 1985...And until 29
May 1992.

All USMC uniform regs were as I described them.

Frankie's lame attempts to suggest otherwise notwithstanding, none of what I said is inaccurate.

According to Google dated 17 November 05, Robeson claimed USMC service from 1974 to 1992.

There is a 13 year to 31 year GAP in there.

Trivial detail according to the Extra Morsemen. They have to hang together...or hang separately.

Looks to me like Hans put on his Manager/CEO hat to "calm the turbulent waters." [he does that once in a while when getting a paternal urge?]

The unwritten rule in here is to allow morsemen to act any damn way they want to. That's okay. No-coders and non-hams are verboten to rise up against Extra morsemen's puerile putzy pejoratives.

Just the same, "clothing allowance" or not, Dudly the Imposter has NOT posted ANY picture of hisself in ANY "active-duty" USMC uniform. Dudly has NOT posted a single scrap of his DD-214 anywhere. Dudly has NOT posted a single name or callsign of anyone who could vouch that he is telling truth.

Dudly the Imposter is still busy being the Imposter.

Hans is defending a FRAUD. Good on Hans. Just what the "amateur community" needs. Pro-bono "defense."

I wonder if Booth, Freret, Imlay, and Tepper know about this?

Well, let's look optimistically. Mebbe Dudly will have a cute little Ham Jumpsuit photo sometime? Mebbe with a "I was homeland security before there was homeland security" ribbon on it? Mighty warrior, etc. Then he can claim "8 hostile actions" after having made it through the Code War.

These mighty warriors certainly know how to turn off any ham wannabes...which may be why Val Germann is still an unmodified Tech for so long?

Who is Dudly?

Was anyone required to?

We have yet to see YOU in a uniform, yet you have "signed" hundreds of posts with your former service number.

Who's Dudly?

And we've not seen a single scrap of YOUR DD-214 anywhere either.

Who's Dudly?

As for me, I've posted numersou callsigns that can be verified by the agencies that assigned them.

The only "imposter" I see here is the one who claims to know so much about Amateur Radio but has never spent one second as a licensed Amateur Radio operator.

I wonder what the IEEE would say about you using your IEEE domain hello dr fong........

my cb radio friends would like to invite you over to steveo's dump in ohio for our gay cb club's holiday suck-off follies!

we suck off each other and spit the load into steveo's old whore he keeps around as a sperm catcher!

she was supposed to put on a show at her blow-job booth at dayton, but 'ole steveo was a no show coward.

It doesn't take much to "discredit (you) and divert attention" from ANYthing related to you, Frankie. You do almost all of the work for me!

And regardless of where the hyphen goes, YOU still have TWO court martials to your credit!

My -214 says "Honorable"...Not "Less Than", or "General", or BCD, or anything else.

> But if you have proof to the contrary > (as well as proof that you were active duty for those 18 years) then
> by all means prove me a liar.

It's already been done. References have been posted over and over.

That you are too incompetent or too cowardly to follow up on them is NOT my problem.

> It really bugs you that a shitbird PFC earns an honorable discharge > while you skated out on a medical discharge after 18 years, doesn't > it?

First of all, you didn't "earn" an "honorable" discharge. Your less-than-honorable discharge was later upgraded to an "honorable", at least per your story.

IF...and I repeat IF your story is valid, you were GRANTED an upgrade. It wasn't "earned".

> It must -really- irk you that the same shitbird PFC is tearing > down the false-front you have built around your mediocre "career" as a > Marine reservist. Well, that's your problem, Dud. Deal with it.

What you HAVE done, Frankie is lie, deceive and, at best, take a flying-A leap guess at everything you've cared to comment on. And you've flopped EVERY time.

Your brusied ego has gotten in the way of your rants at every turn.

Your "theory" that I couldn't persue my interests in EMS without being a "reservist" is hillarious. How you figured that I couldn't muster enough off duty time in 18 years to squeeze in a 140 hour course is beyond me. (It only took 4 1/2 months of off duty time in Winter 85/6).

And Franke, communications encryption devices on USMC helos were JULIETT, not "VINSON". The crypto of choice for the Sea Stallions, as were all other UH/AH/CH birds I had occassion to be around was the KY-28.

Your rants about uniforms are priceless. Unfounded and confused, but priceless. I was going to see if you'd actually follow up on my suggestion, knowing that you either wouldn't, or that you'd never acknowledge that you did since I already know the answer...

Hans popped in with the applicable MCO, however, cutting that short. The diversion of "that's a 2005 regulation" was expected. Yet the same phone call you could have (but won't, you slimey coward...) made can verify that the policy on uniform issues has been essentially the same for decades.

Oh...And your "chit book" references...THAT is the stuff of "confused sideline warriors", Frankie.

Now, unless you want to use some more profanities or make more less-than-thinly-veiled threats of physical violence, why don't YOU go away...Afterall this is an AMATEUR RADIO forum, and unless you've been misrepresenting you identity, you're the outsider...

The KY-28 airborne cryptos were neither VINSON nor JULIETT. All the TSEC/KY-8/28/38 were NESTOR family cryptos.

Until VINSON family was introduced in the 80's, US crypto system families carried names from Greek mythology (ADONIS, BACCUS, JASON, NESTOR, ORESTES, PONTUS, etc.). There never was a US crypto system named "JULIETT".

Sorry, Hans, but yes there was.

The KY-28, used on the OV-10A and D, AH1G and J, the UH-1N, the CH53 A & D were refered to as "JULIETT'. I do not contest that it may have been refered to by those other names in other weapons systems, but USMC Aviation, at least in the Helo/OV Community, refered to it otherwise.

Your memory on this issue is not accurate.

Regardless of platform, user agency, or military department, crypto systems are named by NSA (not by the Navy, USMC, or whoever). The KY-8/KY-28/KY-38 family was named "NESTOR".

I am well familiar with the crypto suite installed in those airframes. When assigned as a member of the communications staff at CINCLANT, I could have told you the NSA serial number of every KY-28 and what tail number carried it in every US/NATO aircraft in the Atlantic theatre.

What's wrong with sticking a 1/4 wave or 5/8 wave loaded verticle into the ground. Bury a couple of radials in the ground. I have a 5BTV verticle bolted to a pipe I stuck in the ground about 3 feet. Been in the ground for a couple years and works very good on 10m.

Hang a flag at the top and there ya go - it's a flag pole.

It's fine for a new boot going into the Navy NOW. Says dink about what it was three decades ago and "yellow footprint" time. But, let's not quibble about teeny details...:-)

And, since I only posted this call for help in ONE newsgroup...how did the response end up crossposted? Well, just for that, here's my post in its entirely:

My co-worker (a widow with two preschoolers and a teenager) lost everything in the hurricane. Her home was demolished in the disaster. She has worked for our employer for at least 15 years. I know she doesn't make much money or have a pension. Her husband died in her arms (in the lobby of the hospital where he'd just had outpatient surgery) @ 5 years ago while she was still pregnant with her youngest child, her little boy. 3-4 years ago, she had breast cancer...she had to go through a mastectomy, chemo and radiation. Fortunately she has recently been told she's now cancer-free. She has been through soooo much...too much. She is always calm and collected ("I have to because of these kids"). I am doing whatever I can to collect stuff to make it easier on her to set up housekeeping when she gets an apartment or home and I could use your help. And, around the corner is Christmasï¿½I can only imagine her stress level. If anyone is cleaning out their kids' closets, your hand-me-d owns would be greatly appreciated. Please help (no cash, only donations of toys, clothing, anything for the house -- gently used or new) this family have a decent Christmas and a jumpstart to build a life.

Additionally, she desperately needs a house/apartment rental--something very reasonable. She has strong references and our employer will guarantee her rent.

Any and all donations will be greatly appreciated.

Below are sizes of the family members:

Mother (widow, mother, cancer survivor)

Clothing size -- 20
Shoe size -- 10

Older daughter (17)

Pants -- 16

Blouse -- Large
Shoes -- 9

6 yr old daughter

Clothing -- 7
Shoes -- 1.5

5 yr old son

Clothing -- 5 or 6
Shoes -- 11

For example, everyone in the Air Force up until 1994 knew what AFR 35-10 was.

Gen McPeak had the regulations rewritten as Air Force Instructions, and renumbered everything. Similarly, he reorganized the major commands and almost everyone got new unit names. I think he was operating from the principle, "When in doubt, Reorganize (and cut your manpower numbers in half)." By keeping everyone confused, it was hard to tell that they were making the service broken.

Make all the justifications you want, Dud -- the fact is that you unwittingly provided all the proof yourself........:

You didn't know squat about uniform issuance; you don't even remember paying for your first uniform issue in boot camp from your chit book.

You didn't know squat about restriction or liberty, demonstrating that you never served with any OOD which is a regular NCO duty (also done by non-rates when there are no NCO's available -- did it myself a couple times).

You didn't know that the Marine Corps has Shore Patrol, not MP's.

You didn't know that avionics techs (your alleged MOS) are regularly deployed with the FMF.

You didn't know about the VINSON system. To wit: "I know who Col Vinson was and I know where Ft Gordon is. Never served with him/for him/within 100 miles of him." Neither did you know that the VINSON system replaced almost all outdated crypto systems in the late '70's, including the old punch-pin monsters (KY-28/38 of the NESTOR system, which had been almost completely replaced by the VINSON system by the early '80's).

You didn't know the difference between a 'hitch', a 'cruise', and a 'float'.

You mistakenly assumed the origination of the phrase "One Shot One Kill" was from the Army Sniper School; wrongfully presumed that it is a tactic taught to all Marine recruits; then proceeded to demonstrate your ignorance about basic combat tactics, the use of shotguns, and the very common 40mm grenade launchers (M-79 & M-203).

You claimed that "the only targets used to train Marine riflemen (and all recruits) [are] head shots and 'center mast', or chest shots", but didn't know that the standard round marksmanship-type targets are also used, and much more often than "dog" targets. In fact, most of rifle qualification is done with the round targets. But you didn't know that despite your claim to have "[taken] home an 'Rifle Expert' on each and every trip to the range".

You didn't know that only the results of an Article 15 proceeding are recorded, not the entire proceedings; and you don't even know what page in the SRB they are recorded.

You didn't know that Marines are often prohibited from taking any off-duty employment, nor did you know that such a decision is usually made by the CO, not HQMC.

You didn't know that outside communications can be prohibited during a base lock-down or unit activation.

You defined a 'chit' as "A Naval term for a 'permission slip'", when in fact it means -any- piece of paper with something written on it.

You didn't know that a dishonorable discharge can only be given as a result of a conviction in a General court-martial, and is usually given after a few years at Leavenworth and a reduction to Private.

You didn't know that the Corps doesn't use cutting scores for promotions.

You misquoted your SIX alleged promotion certificates (a misquote that I later found on google verbatim).

You didn't understand that "years and months in specialty" (box 11 on the DD-214) is not the same as time in service, yet claimed that you have -several- DD-214's.

You claimed that time on the delayed entry program was considered to be time in reserve status but never was.

You stated that "My DD-214 says 'Honorable'...", yet after 1979 there is no box on the form to designate character of service. The DD-214 is only a "release or discharge from active duty", not a final discharge certificate. Only that latter will denote the character of service.

You claimed to have served from 03 September, 1974 to 29 May, 1992. That's only 17 years and 9 months. Yet you also claim to be retired, which can only happen if you served 20 years. You also claimed to have been discharged for medical reasons, having your discharge later upgraded (a claim which you have both denied and acknowledged). You didn't know that medical discharges cannot be upgraded, nor that time not served cannot be arbitrarily added to the end of an enlistment in order to obtain retirement benefits.

BTW, my MOS was 2841 which is "ground radio repair", not "ground radar repair".

And you still haven't answered one really basic question: With all your careers, activities and obligations, where do you find the time to post as much as you do on Usenet?

Len was right -- you were never in the Marine Corps. You are indeed an imposter.

Pretty close. Actually the person using my screen nic is Doug Adair N8WWM. He's a real nutcase, abandoned his family, jobless, court ordered psychiatry. Just google "N8WWM", it will explain everything.
You'll have to look at the headers, he's famous for changing screen

There's no "justifications", Frankie.

You lied, got busted, and now you're even more determined than ever to TRY and hit some "responsive chord"....

THE BEST you can hope for is to show that your ONE tour in the Marine Corps taught you just enough to surf the web in search of keywords you HOPE will fill in the holes....Holes left by your legal troubles while you WERE in....

So far, you're not doing so well...

Refer to the MCO.

I didn't pay a dime. Nor was it deducted from my pay.

The "chits" accounted for government money spent...Not mine.

UNQUOTE

So Frankie...What about those non-existant MP's...?!?!

Need some more Kleenex to clean off that bloody nose, punk?

I snipped the rest.

You can "argue" that I was trying to be "evasive", but the truth of the matter is that YOU are the one with credibility issues here, and they are in no small way due to your ego overdriving your common sense, Frankie.

The transistor that heats up immediately is bad (excessive C-E leakage).

The DVM test procedure is to use the diode check function. Imagine a transistor as two diodes back-to-back with the base being the common element. Test from base to emitter, and from base to collector. You should only get a reading in one direction on each test (when the base is above either of the other elements), and it should be around 600 mV.

Depending on the deed restrictions, even a flag pole may require an architectural committee to review the plans before erecting even a flag pole.

Right now the best antenna to put up for VHF use is a log periodic that can look like a TV antenna. Some deed restricted associations have so poor a turnouts for yearly meetings they cannot alter rules that have been nulled by federal regulations. The Communications Act of 1996 strikes down the blanket "No outside antenna" restrictions.
Associations should have gone back and altered restrictions to prohibit outside TV antennae and restrict other antenna systems for amateur and cb radio.

If they have not done that, then technically there is no antenna restrictions. One should check their deed restrictions and updates and confirm anything with a lawyer.

Ok, ill agree to alter that to,"there have been more bloody wars and

DIFFERENT ORDER AND DIFFERENT RESULTS

Why do we send a kid to college and spend $30,000 (plus or minus) per year for four (plus or minus) years? Is there a difference whether we do it right after high school or after a stint in the "real world" such as the military, etc? Lots of kids come out of college (attended directly following high school) and cannot find a "good" job because they have no real and immediately marketable skills. Another kid, who learns a trade such as carpentry, on the other hand, can always find a "good" job which cannot be done "over the phone" by a competitor in India. These are tough choices and expensive ones at that.

Kids learn moral habits in their childhood, personal habits during their teens, and professional habits in their early 20s. Because of this, there will be big differences among kids who do college right after high school and those, for example, who do college after an enlisted stint in the military. You can combine both effects by doing much the same together, such as at West Point or Annapolis. Our magnificent U.S. World War II effort was run by Franklin Roosevelt (high school directly followed by college) and Dwight Eisenhower (a West Point graduate), and not by skilled carpenters or enlisted men who later went to college. It does make a big difference on how you organize and the order of someone's education.

Another issue is grades. Many kids focus on grades at the expense of education, and others focus on education at the expense of grades. I once interviewed a kid at a top mid west university and asked him, as I the did all the other kids, what was his (or her) greatest defeat in life? He said "Well I got a B on a paper rather than an A; I thought I knew what the professor wanted, but I guess I didn't." Compare that with me. I would have said "Look at this, I got a B instead of an A; the professor is a 'moron'!"

The kids always argue that they need grades to get into professional school (they do), and I argue that you need a good education to get through a professional life. They counter with "Well if you don't get into medical school or law school or engineering school, you will never get to be that type of professional, for example, at all. Yes, this is obviously true. And the debate goes around and around.

One thing I have found about the engineering profession in particular and all professions in general: You are either an engineer or you are not. We rarely, no never, look at where that professional trait was acquired or what his or her grades were. Then, you are either a good engineer or not. You are either a good doctor or not. You are either a good dentist or not. You are either a good lawyer or not. You are either a good officer or not. You are either a good teacher or not. Etc. I guess we do distinguish whether professionals can pass the state exams, etc. to be licensed to practice. This is always a matter of getting the license or not. You already have the tools to get licensed; you simply have to use those tools and study hard enough to pass the comprehensive professional exams. For some it comes easier than for others. John Kennedy, Jr. had to take his bar exams many times before he passed.

BRIAN CROW, K3VR

One thing about college right after high school is the acquisition of disciplined professional thinking such as Franklin Roosevelt or Dwight Eisenhower had. Anything else is so easy to spot such as with (Brian Crow, K3VR*, and) so many people I have encountered throughout life. Adolf Hitler was politically brilliant because his thinking was not professionally disciplined and thus "hindered." Look what happened to him! By the way, Alexander the Great was pretty ruthless also and killed quite a few people in his conquering escapades as well, and I do not approve of either military leader, despite the positive effects of spreading civilization and commerce as was true with Alexander or advancements in science as was motivated by Hitler. World War II had many positive effects on our world, but millions of lives, including those of our precious animals, is far too steep a price to pay for progress. Humans seem to make war and will continue to do so whether or not I approve, however!

Brian "fakes it" and fools many (fools), I imagine. He may be good at taking information in at a school like U. Mass and regurgitating it back to indifferent teachers for a grade of A. It is the lack of professional habits that kills Brian. His indifferent teachers (if his diploma is not a fake) did him a disservice. But, like the guy in the movie "Catch Me If You Can," diplomas and much else can be faked. Brian claims to have worked for NSA, and they create phony people all the time. Getting a ham license by fraud would be quite easy for an NSA type. I heard Brian calling CQ on 14.275 the other day, and he did not come back to a strong CW response. I question whether he can copy CW at all?!!! K3VR is listed an Extra class.

Let's look at Brian Crow specifically. He publishes all his stuff anonymously. He creates a "political cartoon" about K1MAN on a free anonymous web site and then says "Hey, I just 'saw' this, take a look at it yourself." He makes up phony experts like "Dr. Hasenfus" (an alleged attorney) who then states a legal "opinion" obviously not the work of a real attorney. Brian could easily find a real attorney; he does not need a phony one UNLESS he is trying to fool a few fools.

If Brian was not required to write a thesis at his alleged university for his Master's, just say so. His third grade grammar would never have gotten him a Master's if a thesis had been required. I believe the University of Maine will also confer a Master's in Education without a thesis. It is embarrassing for a "Master of Education" in this country, with the sorry state of education here, to write and publish on the internet (no proof readers) with very poor grammar. I say "embarrassing." If Brian has something to say that is important, then to heck with the grammar.

Brian is probably smart, but his undisciplined thinking prevents him from making it when up against professionals. I wonder what Riley Hollingsworth REALLY thinks about Brian Crow? Yuk, yuk yuk! I wonder what Riley Hollingsworth REALLY thinks about Glenn Baxter? Chuck O'Neal, K1KW, an engineer, can't think clearly at all about Glenn Baxter because of "Radio Rage" akin to "Road Rage." In this case, all bets (and the gloves) are off.

Brian is obviously obsessed with Glenn Baxter, and this clinically abnormal behavior (in my engineering opinion) is most likely a very severe case of "Wannabe." If Brian is happy with his pursuits, then I guess it is OK. I believe the most important thing is to be happy.

GLENN BAXTER'S EDUCATION

Now let's get to Glenn Baxter. Not a traditional education, really. In college I spent all my time studying the book and did problems for the first time during the exams. The other kids studied the theory little and worked on problems with other kids in groups. At Northwestern, my fraternity brothers (Lamda Chi Alpha) were always talking about old exams that were in the house files. I never bothered with them. Dwight Eisenhower forced the Army Department to release old West Point entrance exams, and he and another kid worked all summer studying them. Now that IS very smart indeed! I would do that if I thought of it. No wonder General Eisenhower ended up with five stars! He was smart, and I don't mean IQ. Different kids learn different ways. I would study the book and then look at other books and "make connections" among them. This is how I preferred to learn. I would flunk all the exams and then get an A or B on the final and end up with a C in the course. I ended up with an engineering school 2.35 GPA (pre Viet Nam "grade inflation"), but I was honored upon graduation because of my First Place (Second Place nationally) and Third Place Awards for written and oral presentations of technical papers in Boston and Syracuse, and my 4th place Award at the Annual Boston University Debating Contest.

PROFESSIONAL ENGINEERING EXAMINATIONS

Six years after graduation, I studied for six solid months for my professional engineering exams and pulled all of those "connections" together. It was great fun and the best investment of six months that I have ever made. I put numbers on pieces of paper in an oatmeal box. I shook the box, picked out numbers, and that is how I selected the next problem to work on out of my book of sample professional engineering exam questions. Each morning I would say to myself "It's time to go out to the 'snake pit'!" I loved it, really! The very first problem I worked on took me two weeks to solve. At the exam, you had only 45 minutes, on average, to solve a similar problem! I got through engineering school with a six inch K. & E. slide rule and then literally breezed through the P.E. exams with a fairly new HP 35 scientific calculator and HP 80 financial calculator, each costing $400, like $4,000 each today! Now you can get the same calculating power for less than $10 each! God, what a huge difference!

I had those little red HP 35 numbers dancing around on those ten digit displays, and this was like cruising down a super highway in a brand new Rolls Royce with the radio on a classical music station.

I took the P.E. exams in Illinois, at that time the most difficult state, and passed the first time with honor grades. Many, if not most, PhDs are somehow unable (or too specialized and/or too arrogant and unwilling to do the tedious review work) to pass the state Professional Engineering Exams. PhD engineers at more research scientist and university teaching orriented while BS engineers are more applied scientists or else go into management, etc. The P.E. Exams are two full grueling days and are like taking final exams (7 years after graduation) in the 10 most difficult engineering subjects; Mathematics, Physics, Chemistry, Statics, Dynamics, Strength of Materials, Fluid Mechanics, Thermodynamics, Electricity, and Engineering Economy. This, a kid, me, who had flunked his first Novice, Technician, General (code), Extra, and First Class Commercial FCC tests.

NON TRADITIONAL EDUCATION

As I said, not a "traditional" education. I "screwed around" through my first 8 grades of school (I had a chemistry lab, photography dark room, and amateur radio station) and then needed 11 1/2 years to finish 8 years of high school and college. At today's prices of $30,000 per year, that's a difference of $105,000 in costs and (at $100,000 per year for today's typical engineering graduate) $350,000 in lost income for a total of $500,000 in today's money.

I could afford it; most kids can't. I feel that my abilities are well worth the extra $500,000, but I don't recommend this approach to kids today. I tell them to do their homework, and if you get to 8th grade without doing this you will be "screwed" as 99.999999% of them would be for sure.

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER

I have taught high school physics, chemistry, algebra, trig, advanced math, and general science. As a substitute teacher, I have taught kindergarten through 12th grade advanced placement physics and also AP statistics. As a sub I have tagged with kids through all those grade levels and have never been in a classroom in any capacity where I didn't also learn something new and significant. Whenever I visit Vermont Academy, I always attend a few classes. I was even a chemistry lab partner on one bright Saturday mourning at V.A.. I could gleefully repeat 6th through 12th grades all over again and learn a great deal. I would not care to repeat college, however! Too much work for the gain that I would reap. Actually, I find graduate courses to be a huge drag; I prefer self study, reading, and writing now. I have a lot of this latter type of academic and research work that I want to do in life, and I am running out of time.

PRO SE LAWYER

In court, I am also not traditional. Traditional is to get in trouble like O.J., Monica, John Dean, or Martha Stewart and end up with attorney's fees in the millions. I do it all myself for free and get the same results, basically, as a team of expensive attorneys would get for me. You don't have to win each individual case in order to win the war. Some cases are for softening up the opposition so that you CAN win the war. I always win the wars. I have great flexibility in court that counters the prejudice afforded by judges to licensed attorneys. I audited ONE law course in college, and I go up and win big in the important cases against the best attorneys in the country. You have to be right, and you have to understand the United States Constitution. As with debating in college, you also need to go to the library and get good "evidence" as we called it. I was First Negative in college debating and pretty good at it. My debating partner, Second Negative (Sheila O'Malley), would then come in and clean up the mess, so to speak.

I really love "legal" movies such as "A few Good Men," "Rainmaker," the one with Paul Newman, "The Jury," I think it was called, and half a dozen others. The basics are all the same in these films with the same theme of good versus evil. I view Baxter vs. the FCC as good versus evil. Most people view this the same way with the extremely interesting twist of which one is good and which one is evil?

I became a pro se lawyer on the advice of my own attorney and out of necessity. At some early point in the Baxter Electronics litigation I hired an attorney, Clinton Townsend, and paid him a $300 up front retainer. It was my idea, and he was happy to get it. $300 was a good hunk of change back then. He said to me "This is a nice way to start!" When that $300 retainer quickly ran out he taught me how to file my own legal pleadings and briefs. Most importantly, I learned, from a licensed attorney, that I could, indeed, represent myself in all courts, which I have done, myself, ever since, all the way to the United States Supreme Court. I have often wondered what Maine judges would do to poor old Mr. Townsend if they ever found out what a monster he had thus created!

A lot of my court appearances and pleadings were just "warm up" exercises for the present challenges, here in 2005.

It all really started, however, with my cheap skate brother in law George Sternad. I was driving to Maine from Scarsdale, New York the Summer after my Freshman year at Northwestern's Technological Institute. I was in the passing lane on a two lane highway. There was a state truck in the same passing lane spraying crab grass and going 4 miles per hour. The sky was bright ahead of the truck, and I was, perhaps, day dreaming a bit. I realized the truck was almost stopped, and I slammed on the brakes, making 100 feet of skid marks. The brakes in my 1959 American Rambler faded 20 feet before the truck, and I hit it hard. I pushed the steering wheel into the metal dashboard and thus made two dents. My head slammed down on my arm, and I opened a huge gash over my eye. I was not knocked out, just bleeding a lot. I went out to "supervise" the measuring of the skid marks. Look at a current photo of me, and you can see that one eye is a bit screwed up, so to speak. It also loosened a few screws in my head, I gather, as well! I went to the hospital for a day and for observations. Actually the "Candy Stripes" seemed the most interested in observing me, it seemed! I hitched a ride back to Scarsdale. I stood in the middle of an entry ramp and literally stopped a car. The guy said "Are you legitimate?" My messed up eye got me a ride to within a block of my house on 31 Claremont Road.

My mother was putting my sister's kids to bed that evening and said "We are so happy that Uncle Glenny is home safe, aren't we? Pookie then said "Yes, but we are not happy about his eye!" I found another car and headed back to Maine. I was wearing sunglasses to hide my new "shiner." I fired up the big boat (1956 Century) to motor up to see my best friends Nancy and Paul Corman. It was getting dark, and I forgot to take the sunglasses off. I nearly ran over Lee and Marge

Frank, fishing in my travel lane up the lake. Marge let out a blood curdling shriek, and I turned away just in time. Forever after that, the Franks considered me to be totally insane! Many hams would agree!

Back to the car accident:

I was charged by the Connecticut State Police with reckless driving, a serious offence. I wanted to get an attorney, but my cheap brother in law (our estate was still in probate) advised that I didn't need a lawyer. "OK," I thought, "No big deal."

I appeared in court weeks later. The state attorney talked to me and tried to give me a line of crap as I remember it. Then some stooge sitting next to me tried to convince me that I should plead "Nolo Contendere," as he put it, abbreviated "Nolle," as he put it. "Let the court decide," as he put it. "BS," I thought. I guess the hell! I would have pleaded guilty!!

At trial the state attorney put the state truck driver on the stand and asked him the usual BS questions about the last time they checked the lights on the truck, etc. I cross examined the driver. "How fast was your truck moving?" "Four miles per hour," he replied. "What were you doing," I asked? "Spraying crab grass," he replied. "Did you put out any special lights and warning flags behind the truck AFTER the accident," I queried. "Oh yes," he replied, "We put out lights and flags for over 1,000 feet." "Why did you put out those lights and flags," I went on. "Well, to prevent another accident," he replied. I knew that I had him, the lawyer "killer instinct" coming out in me for the first time in a court of law, and I had begun this quite serious trial by "winging it" with no pre plan whatsoever. "Tell me this," I continued, "what is the difference between your four miles per hour and my 60 miles per hour compared with your zero miles per hour and other cars going 60 miles per hour that prompted you to put out all those warning lights and flags?" He sat there in baffled silence. You could hear a pin drop in the court room. I repeated the question again and again. Baffled silence. The judge finally rescued the truck driver and answered "The difference is four miles per hour. My ruling is that Defendant Glenn Baxter is not guilty of the charge of reckless driving." "BAM" went his gavel. I talked with the judge afterwards and asked him that even though I won, would I be better off if I had never been charged in the first place? I had to press him hard for an answer. He finally said "Yes, certainly."

He was right. I later got a letter from the state truck driver's attorney saying that his client was suffering "neck pains." I was now back at Northwestern. I wrote back telling him to "stuff it," since my insurance company and theirs was the same company. I never heard from them again!

BAXTER ELECTRONICS

Then my company, Baxter Electronics (Inc.) went into receivership in 1970. Kenton Quint (owner of the Somerset Telephone Company and Chairman of the Baxter Electronics Board of Directors) had invested $60,000 in BE and, as he put it, didn't want to share a loss with Baxter Electronics. He simply wanted to take 100% control through court "muscle." He and his attorney, Frank Southard, a judge at age 25, had enormous influence. My corporate attorney, Bob Williamson, suddenly developed "laryngitis" and let me hang out to dry. I hired Bob Marden. Marden's dad, a Maine Supreme Court judge, was to be our judge. We got another judge, Judge Reed. I felt Marden was selling me out, so I fired him, post haste. He then sent me a bill for $150. His brother, Don Marden, now a Superior Court judge, sued me, personally, for the $150 dollars, and I argued that they should join the other unsecured Baxter Electronics creditors since they were all so eager to put my company in receivership and discontinue all manufacturing and marketing operations.

To side track a bit:

District Judge Pooler ruled against me in this $150 lawsuit. I appealed to Superior Court. While on appeal, I was dragged back into District Court for an asset disclosure hearing. My car was at VW for servicing, and I had a copy of "War and Peace" with me, just in case, if you get my drift. I get one phone call, right? "Hello VW? I won't be in today to pick up my car!"

I was sworn in, and the opposing attorney, Billy Dubord, (we grew up on the lake together) asked me if I was married. I pulled out a 3 X 5 card and read: "I refuse to testify on the grounds that to do so might deny my rights as guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

Judge Pooler came up out of his chair! I will never forget it. "All right Mr. Baxter, do you want to go to jail?" The Sheriff was in the courtroom drooling at me. I read from the card again and again. The judge asked if I understood the consequences of my actions. I said that I did understand the Constitution of the United States. He finally gave up and called a recess. He went to his office to read up on law, I guess.

He came back out in civilian clothing to talk to me. We chatted at length. He finally said "Mr. Baxter, I don't know what you are, but whatever it is, it STINKS. You should have been a lawyer!"

Then Donald Marden (now a Superior Court Judge) wrote the court and tried to get them to issue an execution. I turned him in to the bar association, a joke then as the Board of Overseers of the Bar is now. The case died in appeal, and the $150 was never paid, I gather. Marden then dropped out of his bid for District Attorney, a newly created $25,000 per year paid position, "for personal reasons." Joan Sandy, an old friend of mine from my teens, got that job instead.

Back to the original train of thought:

We had several hearings, and Judge Reed signed a Southard drafted ORDER of receivership. I called the judge, pissed as hell. He said he had signed the order to "pin this thing down," as he put it. The local town drunk (according to my Secretary, Maryse Price) had been appointed as the Receiver. I protested to Judge Reed. He then appointed Maine Supreme Court Chief Justice Williamson as the Receiver. Judge Williamson was the father of my original attorney, Bob Williamson, the one who dropped out because of "laryngitis." Bob really dropped out because this was going to be a "dirty deal," with Frank Southard in the mix. Bob Williamson had dated my oldest sister Betty when he was a counselor at Camp Winona, and she was a counselor at the sister Camp Wyanogonic, both in Denmark, Maine.

Anyway, Chief Justice Williamson came to see me in my radio studio building and sat in my big blue easy chair. What a sight! When he found out that Baxter Electronics had no money, he resigned. He had visions, he said, of writing a Baxter Electronics check, an "adjustment" as he worded it, and getting Kenton Quint off my back. Judge Reed (an icon on the Maine bench) then appointed Bob Viles, who was looking for employment for his son. More hearings, of course.

Let's backtrack to the first court appearance before Judge Reed. There was a trial going on. I walked into the courtroom. Then Quint's Attorney, Frank Southard, walked into the courtroom. Judge Reed spotted Southard and stopped the trial on a dime. He asked Southard if HE wanted to adjourn to chambers. Southard, clearly embarrassed, said "No, I think there will be evidence introduced." How do you spell C L O U T?

I went to SCORE to get a volunteer advisor. He told me a lot. One thing he talked about was criticizing those in authority. He said to do it like this:

"With all due respect to your high rank Admiral, your ass is blowing in the wind."

One time in a hearing in chambers with Judge Reed, the judge said: "Mr. Baxter, now you are criticizing the way I do business, and I don't like that!" I said: "Well, your honor, I certainly don't mean to criticize the way you do business, but....." and then I went up one side of him and down the other, all over again. After the hearing the Bailiff mentioned to me "Jeese, we could you shouting at the judge all the way out in the courtroom!" He was totally mortified.

Another time a court bailiff tried to kick me out of the law library at Kennebec County Courthouse in Augusta, Maine. Excuse me? He had no success.

Finally, we ran through Judge Reed, so to speak, and Supreme Court Judge Webber took over the case. Several more hearings and finally Supreme Court Judge Delahanty took over the case as the last judge in the matter.

I remember a hearing in chambers with Judge Delahanty. At one point I reached to pull out my brand new HP 35 engineering calculator (I would later use it in Chicago to pass my Professional Engineering exams) which was in a leather belt holder kept closed with Velcro. Everybody in the room bolted; they thought it was a tape recorder! I find that all Maine judges are terrified whenever I pull out a tape recorder, which I often do. They always threaten to take it from me, and I always shut it off. In a deposition, however, my trusty tape recorder rolls!

I argued that now court controlled and therefore "shut down" Baxter Electronics had abandoned the "E-DAC" trade mark that and that I could "grab it" if wanted to. The judge asked if I knew how long it took to legally abandon a trade mark. "Yes, I replied, two years."

Remember Ipana tooth paste and Bucky Beaver? "Brusha, brusha, brusha, new Ipana toothpaste, brusha, brusha, brusha, it's better for your teeeeeeeeth?" Their TV and radio ads costs millions, and then they folded. Some outfit then stuffed tubes with generic toothpaste, called it Ipana, and made a bundle.

I took the same position when I grabbed the Collins trade mark. You can actually see in QST where Rockwell airbrushed the Collins "meatball" logo off the front of S-line gear. So, for years, I owned the abandoned Collins trade mark. Rockwell bitterly complained to me long after I was through with it, and I said, "Look, let's just both move on to other things." I never heard from them again after that. They could have bought a lot of influence in court, I suspect. If I had had any further use for the Collins trade mark, I would have duked it out with Rockwell.

Also in that chambers hearing before Delahanty, Judge Reed kept sticking his head in the door and inviting us all to come down to the court house Christmas party. I gathered he was just curious about the Baxter Electronics case, long ago taken away from him. His portrait and (now Judge) Donald Marden's hang in honor in the small courtroom in the Kennebec County courthouse in Augusta, Maine. You spell C L O U T this way: C L O U T!

Anyway, with Baxter Electronics tied up in Receivership and Baxter Associates, Inc. (which owned all the office equipment), now controlled by my Baxter Associates, Inc. stock holdings (I paid myself my salary in Baxter Associates, Inc. stock), I then "fired up" as G.A. Baxter Electronics and continued the E-DAC business for years as usual. There is more than one way to skin a cat! Delahanty finally dissolved the old Baxter Electronics, and Quint bought all BE assets for the tidy sum of $2,000. He later tried to sell me the warehouse full of parts, but, "Sorry, pal, I'm not interested!" Anybody need a few million 1N4002 diodes?

Now I have a major case pending before, guess who?, Supreme Court Judge Delahanty's son, a Superior Court Judge. Judge Donald Marden has recused himself from all my cases because I sued him for altering a sworn deposition, an alleged criminal act of perjury, of course. After considerable litigation and depositions, we both settled out of court. I let the guy off the hook. His attorney, Jerry Fournier, mentioned to me during the settlement discussions that my lawsuit against Don Marden was really draining his firm, Marden, Dubord, and Chandler. It was also wearing me down! Don Marden is now a Superior Court Judge, and a very good one, from what I hear.

At one deposition, Don Marden brought in a cold can of Tab for me, with a plastic cup over the top, during the break. I will never forget that moment. My mortal enemy serving me a soda! I thought to myself, "This is a classy guy!"

One time senior Judge Delahanty wanted to meet me under the steps of the Augusta Civic Center "to talk." I called Supreme Court Judge Webber at home to discuss this. He told me I didn't have to go and that Delananty couldn't hold me in contempt. I didn't go, and guess what? The toll call I made to Judge Webber did not appear on my telephone bill. I can't prove in court that I ever talked to Judge Webber that night, now can I?. I remember the call well. His wife answered the phone, and I asked to speak with "Judge Webber." She seemed tickled at the respectful way I had referred to him, I thought to myself at the time. Wives are funny that way, aren't they?

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

By comparison, dealing with punks like FCC attorney Riley Hollingsworth seems like child's play, doesn't it? Riley writes his silly letters, etc., but there are no court appearances where he could be confronted in public, and there are rules of procedure, rules of evidence, etc. Hollingsworth makes up his own rules and is quite effective with intimidating 99.9999% of the general ham community. This is not my idea of an America where there is liberty and justice for all. What irritates me is that I am paying Hollingsworth's salary! It is, however, the American way, in total, corruption, politics, and all.

Let me end this essay with the wisdom of wood carver David Holmes. He carved the State of Maine logo that graces the Maine legislature Senate chamber. I was complaining to him about the FCC and why can't they make their calls with the same honesty and integrity as an umpire during the World Series? He said "Glenn, that is politics, this is baseball." We were watching the World Series at the time. I repeated my plea, time after time. He repeated his response, time after time, "Glenn, that is politics, this is baseball." "Oh, I get it. The FCC is politics, THIS is baseball." I am pretty darn smart, wouldn't you say?

* We really don't know very much about Brian Crow, K3VR. Drop his name or his alleged company (Stockbridge Consulting - no letterhead) into in a search engine, and nothing comes up. Brian (or who we know as Brian) says he was with NSA, and they create fictitious people all the time. Identity theft is also quite common these days. Perhaps he is in the witness protection program or his name was taken off of a tombstone and he is not Brian Crow at all. Would the REAL Brian Crow, K3VR, please stand up? Has anyone ever seen Brian personally? Has anyone ever snapped a picture of Brian? Has he ever attended a hamfest? Does he have a phone number? K3VR@hotmail.com is not exactly traceable, now is it? Has anybody stopped at his FCC listed address to see what is there? He dropped his own web site years ago (it showed more than a passing interest in little boys), and now he creates many free anonymous pages, all about K1MAN. He seems to create dozens of anonymous E-Mail addresses as well and sends me stuff all the time (I assume it is Brian).

He E-Mails me several times daily from K3VR@hotmail.com and then turns me in as SPAM when I reply! What's with that?

Drop K3VR in a search engine and all that comes up is K1MAN stuff!

On the air, Brian appears to lack the ability to copy CW although listed in the FCC data base as an Extra. NSA types would have no problem getting a ham license by fraud. Brian appears to know little or nothing about electronice or amateur radio theory. On QRZ he has a photo of a big Eimac tube, yet he has bever built an amplifier. What's that all about?

He creates phony "experts" like "Dr. Hasenfus" (an attorney who also does not come up when dropped into a search engine) when a real expert would do just as well, and he even authored a printed nasty letter about K1MAN to the editor in local Maine newspapers by pretending to be from Manchester, Maine. He has filed complaints about K1MAN to the Maine and Illinois professional engineering boards, the Maine Attorney General, Maine State Senators and Representatives, the FCC, Vermont Academy, the SEC, the FTC, etc., etc. ad infinitum. He has a copy of my University of Rhode Island engineering school transcript. How did he come by that?

He sometimes writes with third grade grammar and yet claims to have a Master's in Education from the University of Massachusetts. He is K1MAN's number one detractor, and I am flattered by all the attention. The FBI says that such extensive activity is usually paid for by some organization with lots of money and an axe to grind. Who would pay Brian to stalk K1MAN? ARRL? The FCC? The CIA? NSA? The telecommunications industry wanting to grab amateur radio? Walter Cronkite? Who? Perhaps the FBI is wrong. Perhaps Brian Crow, K3VR, is just a super sick "wannabe" with a legitimate Master's of Education degree from the University of Massachusetts who obtained his ham ticket by fraud (quite easy really). I forgive you Brian. 73 and GL de K1MAN.

FRIEND,

Hi. Check out www.ChezBrandon.com ; it's awesome. As are you, Brandon is highly intelligent, knowledgeable, and good. May you have an awesome day.

A Succinct Warning: Elements of the Mossad, sated with cash from the murderous and destructive narcotics trade, are using some medical, pharmacy, and food service workers to murder men, women, and children. (A certain tasteless acid, for instance, causes cancer.)

Victor Ostrovsky's books BY WAY OF DECEPTION and THE OTHER SIDE OF DECEPTION: A ROGUE AGENT EXPOSES THE MOSSAD'S SECRET AGENDA offers elucidation, as does James Ennes, Jr.'s ASSAULT ON THE LIBERTY.

Again, may you have an awesome day, and check out www.reopen911.org and www.ChezBrandon.com

You don't wear them any anymore? Tsk, tsk. No wonder you don't

Southeast Region. [southeast region is 6 states including TN]
Later on in this Newsletter is a text pat-on-the-back for two CAP members, one of which is "Capt Steve Robeson."

If a "vice commander" is NOT a superior officer, then the "vice" means something else?

Tsk, you are getting your misogyny all ruffled.

"Never?" What does a Vice Commander of the Southeast Region DO and how is she in the chain of command? Let's see...by the Newsletter's own writing, the "southeast region" includes Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Puerto Rico, and, of course, TENNESSEE.

Remember your IMPORTANCE in the scheme of things...you were "homeland security before there was homeland security!"

Looks like it is still a Good Ol' Boys club playin' sojer in da woods. No pay. All volunteer. They get to wear nice uniforms with pretty medals, call themselves a "force mulitplier!" Yeah, their Table of Organization seems to be mostly Military Police units. "MP" not SP. Note the confusion between MP and SP that Frank wrote about in another thread.

> I never served under a female commander in the Marine Corps.

Of course not. You couldn't stand it, militant misogynist and all. You probably would have called a USMC female superior officer a "CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL NITWIT!"

Does Dudly consider the Naval Academy, Annapolis, MD, a
"CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL?" I'm sure you do.

Does Dudly consider all women "NITWITS?" I'm sure you do.

Keep standing, "Jarhead."

Go to the home page of sujan.hallikainen.org and use links to get to military radios.

Over on Harold Hallikainen's Radio History website, in the uploads section, are some more PDFs on RADIO. Three in all. "AlphabetSoup" is a digitization of a 1962 booklet published by the Japan Signal Overseas Battalion (a merge of the 71st Sig Bn and 72nd Sig Bn that happened after I left for the States in 1956), describing the ADA station functions and equipment as it was, lots more RADIO equipment; supplied by James Brendage, a civilian engineer and Department of the Army and Department of the Air Force employee, who is retired and living in California. Jim Brendage was working at ADA transmitter site when I was assigned there and we corresponded by surface and e-mail after 2000. "The First Walkie Talkie" is about the SCR-300 / BC-1000 VHF two-way backpack FM transceiver that was designed by Motorola (that you insisted "didn't exist" in WW2!), made by them, and was used in all theaters of operation up to and including the Korean War.
Includes some specific design features of the Walkie-Talkie with some schematics obtained from the TM on that radio. The "Microwave Radio Relay" PDF is a general description of that as it was used by land forces from WW2 onwards...including the AN/FRC-23 and AN/FRC-35 that I was a supervisor of and operated.

You might look elsewhere on that site and see, under "National"
[Radio] a digitization of the supplied manual for their 7-inch VHF-channels-only television set of 1948-1949. I had one then, bought it for me and my parents out of MY earnings in part-time jobs. Strictly for nostalgia purposes that digitization, was a good set at the time but not quite state-of-the-art then.

If you go to the home page links to USAER (that's U.S. Army in Europe) history pages and look under Signal units, you can see a Node Diagram and Station Block Diagram of ACAN (Army Command and Administrative Network) as it was in the 50s and 60s, a worldwide HF network that did supply some circuits to the Department of State. I supplied that to the webmaster via e-mail since I had the diagrams from official sources.

Stand down, Jarhead.

Dudly definition of "numerous": "Working" his alternate personalities, his wife, regulars in this newsgroup. Where are the OTHERS?

No one can "refuse to use" something that doesn't exist.

WHO are the licensed radio amateurs you referenced other than your wife and regulars in this newsgroup?

No "double standard" on the NCTA side. No "lies" despite your multiple personalities hopping up and down in "outrage" and not being able to "beat up" your challengers.

Right, we are agreed...you used the WRONG slogans, the WRONG jargon. "Semper Paratus" is the slogan of the USCG. I'll let the REAL Marines handle the jargon...they are all in agreement with Frank...and in DISAGREEMENT with your gems in here, Dud.

> Did you show them where YOU used the deaths of Army KIA's to >polish your USENET brasss with, Scumbag...?!?!

Sorry, you HATING little imposter, I mentioned the 23 members of MY Signal Battalion in HONOR OF THEM. 19 that died in a transport crash on 1 Jul 50 in Korea to reinforce Signal operations after the North Koreans had invaded South Korea.
The other four were killed in individual actions while on temporary duty in Korea, two before the July 1953 truce signing, two after that start of the "forever truce" (the Korean War has NOT officially ended and "truce talks" continue as they have for 52 years). All of them get remembered. I have all their names, ranks, ASNs, their home towns. All assigned to one Signal Battalion, the 8235th Army Unit. The Battalion HONORED their memory at each Retreat Ceremony. The first billet of the 8235th was Hardy Barracks, Tokyo, named for Corporal Elmer Hardy in his honor. The new transmitter site at Kashiwa, NE of Tokyo, was named Camp Tomlinson in 1956 in honor of Frank Tomlinson. Both were victims of the 1 Jul 50 crash. Camp Tomlinson was retained as a name when control of the ADA facilities were transferred to the USAF in 1963.

I have NO need to "polish brass" through mentioning that I HONOR their memory. My work and efforts while assigned to the 8235th AU were all the "brass polish" I ever needed.
That work and effort got me promotions from Private E-2 (at first assignment) to Sergeant E-5 (on release from service) in two years, meeting the minimum time-in-grade required at the time at each level.

Perhaps you'd like to meet some of the "brass polishers" out here who assemble at the Veteran's Cemetary in Westwood (close to the huge UCLA campus in case you're shy on big-city geography) ever Memorial Day and Veteran's Day? Most are middle-aged like yourself. A few are younger guys. Maybe you'd like to holler at them as well as me about "brass polishing their own images" while we bow our heads in prayer for the veterans and place a few American flags on graves? No, I don't think so...your physical safety would be in peril.

> And Lennie, I knew/know enough about "radio theory" to have passed >the FCC examinations for an Amateur Extra license.
>
> You obvioulsy haven't.

"Obviously."

WOW! Aren't you some "genius" in radio theory!

Imagine that! You got an AMATEUR Extra license!

No sweat, Dud, I passed a First Class Radiotelephone (Commercial) Radio Operator license exam in one sitting in a Chicago FCC Field Office in March 1956. Couldn't get a Commercial Q&A book before then, but I got to borrow the entire loose-leaf (then the format) FCC regulations from a friend at a broadcast station and memorized them. I already KNEW the theory needed for either commercial or amateur radio of the time. Was a matter of filling out the forms, drawing a couple schematics, only strain being to remember the right regulations. Only other "problem" was an interruption for a fire drill in the Chicago Federal Building in between 2nd and 3rd elements. That stretched the test time out to about two hours...two of the test elements were "essay" type where one had to write out answers; other two were multiple-choice. Did I know the answers? Yes, but I didn't need any open-pool information as there is now since I ALREADY knew enough "radio theory."

So...you charge that I "don't KNOW enough 'radio theory' to get an amateur radio license?" After taking many college-level semester final exams in electronics theory and finally the final for a degree? After many years as an electronics design engineer and obtaining a sole-inventor patent about radio? I'm sure you THINK that in your own little psychotic way but it would be a snap today to outshine you three ways from Sunday on a REAL "radio theory" test. :-)

> You're not "regular folks", Lennie.
> You're a pathological liar.

Tsk, tsk, tsk. That "mirror syndrome" reveals itself again. Dud looks in the computer screen, sees his own reflection, and insults that. :-)

You've misused "pathological" for years. If you say no, then you admit to posing as a real Medical Doctor, something you are NOT. Real MDs are into pathology. A better insult word would have been "congenital"; i.e., from birth.

Tsk, you use "liar" for everyone who just disagrees with your opinions. That's also wrong use of words. It is also indicative of a deep psychological condition that prevents you from handling ANY disagreement. [one of the things learned in Psych 101-102 courses once required in California for many Bachelors degrees]

Tsk, tsk, you've gone into great lengths on your (mistaken)
USMC life, military helicopters, personal weapons shooting, volunteering as part of the Tennessee STATE Guard, Civil Air Patrol...even the aerospace business and electronics engineering expertise, not to mention blabbering about national and foreign policy of the United States. Is that "all about amateur radio?" I think not. :-) See above. :-)

>Heil.

"Amateur" is unpaid, for personal activity in definition.
I've been a hobbyist in electronics and radio since 1947.

The Johnson Viking Messenger was made solely for Citizens Band Radio Service use.

> Care to show us your tiny Johnson, Lennie?

No, it might make you distraught. I can find a website that does have a picture of a Johnson Viking Messenger. I came across one a few years ago while hunting for more information on a Bendix CB transceiver that I still have; same size as the Johnson, slightly different circuitry. Got it at a discount, new, from Stan Beer, a Bendix field engineer at the time (1960).

I already have digitized photos of my indoor workshop. That includes an HP 606 and HP 608D RF signal generator, two dual-trace oscilloscopes (50 MHz Philips, 60 MHz Protek), frequency and period counter (my design in a ready-built cabinet, newly converted to LED 7-segment display from old Amperex numeric display similar to Nixies), ancient Heathkit audio generator (up to 1 MHz), one 4 1/2 digit DVM, two 3 1/2 digit DVMs, Boonton 190A Q-Meter, Circuit Specialists dual regulated supply (digital readout), the last remaining single regulated voltage-current DC supply that was the subject of a 1969 two-issue Popular Electronics article (had three others but those got built into other equipment), an all-purpose dual pulse generator (own design) which includes an NTSC sync generator (won't be of much use in the future due to HDTV), a Heathkit audio IM distortion analyzer, a 60 KHz WWVB "receiver" (TRF, loop antenna is in the attic space above) for phase-locking a 10 MHz crystal oscillator used as a secondary frequency standard (still playing with new ways to arrange the PLL). Oops, forgot the AADE L-C Meter, an extremely useful little thing for winding toroids to exact Henries, a small capacitance meter that reads to 0.1 pFd on lowest (100 pFd) scale, my own-built adjustable AC line supply with expanded-scale voltmeter. There's also a full Apple][+ computer with two 5" disk drives, 9" and 12" monitors but those hardly see any use now...also the UV erase and reprogramming dingus (also home built) for EPROMs. In that compact space is a 3' x 4' drafting board (don't use the K&E drafting machine now, just the scales) which doubles as an illustrator's board for art work. Workbench is 7 feet wide, cabinets above and below. Rebuilt that whole center room myself from plans drawn up on drafting table mentioned. Came together nicely.

Of course, since you so strenuously objected to receiving digitized files through e-mail, you won't get those images.

Of what relevance is going on and on and on about a supposed "career" in the USMC, volunteerism in the TN STATE Guard, and Civil Air Patrol? However, if you HAD mentioned some of the USMC radio equipment, it MIGHT have given you some creedence.
Since you didn't, your believability went into the dumpster.

If you cannot be accurate on your descriptions of military life, then you cannot be considered accurate in your descriptions of civilian life.

> Then whatEVER avionics I operate is STILL more avionics than YOU >operate!

In the Civil Air Patrol? :-)

Poor Dudly, trying to outshine someone who has DESIGNED part of the test set for a DME-Transponder-TACAN test set at Microradionics, Inc., and a TACAN test set at RCA Corporation.
Tsk, tsk, I've OPERATED both civil and military avionics in-flight, civil radio-nav radios including the omnibearing selector (for navigation) as both student pilot and later as passenger. Need a full-size Jepp plotter? Got one. :-) Piece of cake. Simple stuff.

I'd add some airborne radars in there but you might go bananas. :-) The three generations of RCA Corp. SECANT aren't counted since those were R&D programs and wouldn't be in any USMC aircraft.

> Sorry, Lennie, More facts that you can't seem to deal with....
>
> Seems the Marine Corps thinks differently than you.

No, sweetums, the USMC does NOT "think differently." YOU think differently than reality.

MARS is the amalgam of a special services morale builder and a sort-of "linkage" between the military and other U.S. government agencies. It is NOT any sort of mainstay of the Defence Communications System (DCS) or the Digital Switched Network (DSN). MARS is useful as a last-ditch fall-back radio thing "should everything else fail" (which it won't) and it keeps some folks occupied...but it was NEVER any sort of integral part of any military branch's worldwide communications network.

In the late 1960s and very early 1970s, MARS can be praised for doing a massive amount of phone-patches for service people in Southeast Asia. The United States Army Center for Military History says that in one long history paper. But, the "usefulness" of MARS for that sort of personal communications dwindled to a trickle with the coming of the Internet and the connectability of the DSN to the Internet.
With the increase of small computers in the field (as well as PCs on board water vessels), it became common for service people to communicate directly with family and friends through e-mail and, in slowly-increasing use, VoIP. MARS, to justify its existance, turned to the role of "liason" with other government agencies and exercises such as "Grecian Firebolt." The Vietnam War ended 30 years ago and the old MARS paradigms have bitten the dust now.

It would be to an AMATEUR, a poseur about REAL communications who has no real interest in the HF communications methods that formed the basis for today's HF use by amateurs.

You say it is "boring" only to attempt a left-handed insult again. TRUTH is often boring and what you want is a lot of falsehoods about YOURSELF to make YOU "look good."

That PDF on Hal's radio history website is the TRUTH as it was in the 1950s. It's been verified by N2JTV (who was there at the same time I was) and James Brendage, a civilian engineer employed by the Army (also there the same time I was). The accompanying "AlphabetSoup.pdf" was prepared by a Signal Battalion that did the communications operations.

It is "boring" to you because you resent NOT being in a similar assignment and did NOTHING LIKE THAT in the military.

> No, you didn't "work(ed) massive long-distance HF >communications..."

Signalmen are all pro, always were, always will be. Signal Corps didn't play around in hobby fashion with "radiosport" contests on HF. We got the messages through. 220 thousand a month at ADA, a million and a quarter a month at WAR. Circuits from Tokyo to Alaska, Hawaii, San Francisco, Manila, etc. were LONG.

> You were a radio mechanic. Nothing more, according to your MOS.

Incorrect. The Army has mechanics, but those are all in the motor pool working on vehicles. My MOS was "Microwave Radio Relay Operations and Maintenance Supervisor" (281.6 in the old MOS designation).

> You were not a radio OPERATOR...Nor were you a message center >clerk.

The 8235th Army Unit did NOT operate any "message center." It operated a huge radio transmitter-receiver-torn-tape-relay station serving the Far East Command Headquarters.

The 8235th AU (a battalion strength) did not have one single morse code operator on its TO&E, did not use any morse code modes. I was never a "clerk" of any kind.

I did not "operate receivers" because I was not assigned to the receiver site at Camp Owada, NW of Tokyo. After visiting there several times, it is evident that no one there or with the USAF sharing the site did any morse code "operating." The HF communications modes were, in order of use: TTY, Voice, Facsimile. SSB circuits used the "commercial format" of 12 KHz bandwidth, frequency-multiplexing 4 voice bandwidth circuits; on voice circuit was used as an order-wire, the second voice circuit for "overseas radiotelephone," the remaining two circuits for TTY tones (typically 6 to 12 separate teleprinter circuits). Some of the RTTY radio circuits had time-multiplexing for carrying 4 separate TTY circuits on one radio via USN-contract multiplexer operated by the Carrier crew ("carrier" in the telephony jargon, not Navy).

The purpose of the Army-USAF facility was to maintain world-wide communications over ACAN-STARCOM-DCS 24/7, not to be some sort of Special Services morale builder with hobby activities and phone-patches. Before the commsat era, HF was the only practical long-haul communications means for the U.S. military. The Army did its part with ACAN-STARCOM-DCS and the teletypewriter was the key ingredient to insure both accuracy, readability, and security. The USAF continued that role, being assigned control of the station ADA facilities in 1963 and kept it operational to 1978 when the land and buildings were turned over to the Japanese government. Callsign ADA remains today, now the callsign of the United States Army Pacific, headquartered in Fort Shafter, Hawaii. HF communications in the military is now in a secondary position, used as a back-up mode.

Yes, I was not a MORSE CODE operator. Never pretended to be. The Army just didn't depend on morse code for communications over long radio routes, nor could morse code modes handle the volume of traffic required to maintain worldwide units and logistics and security needs. The Army, indeed all the service branches don't use morse code for communications now, any radio path length. They don't need to. They are pros, not amateurs.

hi all
just a plug for a new site there is a new forum for lmr,pmr,cb and repeater op's and has irc chat

free online radio/electronics classifieds for Australia and the World (give it a go...)

and a whole heap more in the works including a files section the more who get interested the more i'll add :)

thanks for reading

Well by golly, you -REALLY CAN- provide proof of something. It wasn't that hard, was it, Dudly? Or did Han's send you the info in an email? Either way, you were willing and able to address the issue. Progress!

> Need some more Kleenex to clean off that bloody nose, punk?

Nope, and you are too dumb to see that you just gave -yourself- a bloody nose.

> I snipped the rest.

I'll do you a favor and 'unsnip' it so you can address the issues just like you addressed the MP/SP issue. If you like I can repost my allegations with quotes from your own posts so you can address them more specifically -- would that help, Dud?

Ok, let's try this again.....

You didn't know that avionics techs (your alleged MOS) are regularly deployed with the FMF.

You didn't know about the VINSON system. To wit: "I know who Col Vinson was and I know where Ft Gordon is. Never served with him/for him/within 100 miles of him." Neither did you know that the VINSON system replaced almost all outdated crypto systems in the late '70's, including the old punch-pin monsters (KY-28/38 of the NESTOR system, which had been almost completely replaced by the VINSON system by the early '80's).

You didn't know the difference between a 'hitch', a 'cruise', and a 'float'.

You mistakenly assumed the origination of the phrase "One Shot One Kill" was from the Army Sniper School; wrongfully presumed that it is a tactic taught to all Marine recruits; then proceeded to demonstrate your ignorance about basic combat tactics, the use of shotguns, and the very common 40mm grenade launchers (M-79 & M-203).

You claimed that "the only targets used to train Marine riflemen (and all recruits) [are] head shots and 'center mast', or chest shots", but didn't know that the standard round marksmanship-type targets are also used, and much more often than "dog" targets. In fact, most of rifle qualification is done with the round targets. But you didn't know that despite your claim to have "[taken] home an 'Rifle Expert' on each and every trip to the range".

You didn't know that only the results of an Article 15 proceeding are recorded, not the entire proceedings; and you don't even know what page in the SRB they are recorded.

You didn't know that Marines are often prohibited from taking any off-duty employment, nor did you know that such a decision is usually made by the CO, not HQMC.

You didn't know that outside communications can be prohibited during a base lock-down or unit activation.

You defined a 'chit' as "A Naval term for a 'permission slip'", when in fact it means -any- piece of paper with something written on it.

You didn't know that a dishonorable discharge can only be given as a result of a conviction in a General court-martial, and is usually given after a few years at Leavenworth and a reduction to Private.

You didn't know that the Corps doesn't use cutting scores for promotions.

You misquoted your SIX alleged promotion certificates (a misquote that I later found on google verbatim).

You didn't understand that "years and months in specialty" (box 11 on the DD-214) is not the same as time in service, yet claimed that you have -several- DD-214's.

You claimed that time on the delayed entry program was considered to be time in reserve status but never was.

You stated that "My DD-214 says 'Honorable'...", yet after 1979 there is no box on the form to designate character of service. The DD-214 is only a "release or discharge from active duty", not a final discharge certificate. Only that latter will denote the character of service.

You claimed to have served from 03 September, 1974 to 29 May, 1992. That's only 17 years and 9 months. Yet you also claim to be retired, which can only happen if you served 20 years. You also claimed to have been discharged for medical reasons, having your discharge later upgraded (a claim which you have both denied and acknowledged). You didn't know that medical discharges cannot be upgraded, nor that time not served cannot be arbitrarily added to the end of an enlistment in order to obtain retirement benefits.

BTW, my MOS was 2841 which is "ground radio repair", not "ground radar repair".

And you still haven't answered one really basic question: With all your careers, activities and obligations, where do you find the time to post as much as you do on Usenet?

> You can "argue" that I was trying to be "evasive",

.....and it would be a valid argument.

> but the truth

>disgusting troll....

No, Dud, I already -=AM=- a big disgusting troll. But that's a far better thing to be than a Marine Corps imposter.

> Putz.

Well gee, if that's the way you are going to be I might as well tip my King now, huh? I mean, that's about the most persuasive argument that you have made in your defense since this discussion began. How can I possibly ever counter something so monumentally substantial as you calling me "Putz"? I'm doomed........LOL!!!!!

If it was shorted the fuse would blow as soon as the amp was attached to a source of power.

Excessive C-E leakage is a partial short (where the C-E resistance with no bias or signal applied is significantly above zero but well below normal).

You should have known that.

I can see some things never change.

.......oh brother.

Hint #1: The amp doesn't blow a fuse until it's keyed. If the transistor was shorted the fuse would blow on power-up. It's not a shorted transistor.

Hint #2: Excessive quiescient collector current is not definitive of a C-E leak, nor is it even a likely possibility since the gain of the transistor would be almost nil, and keying up isn't likely going to increase the current enough to blow the fuse.

Both of you voodoo-techs missed the obvious and most likely problem:
excessive base bias current. The cause could be a bad bias supply and/or base shunt, or the other transistor (assuming a push-pull amp) being blown wide open.

BTW, who let you out of your cage, Bill?

James,

Checking with a lawyer is probably good advice. Lotsw of verbiage that only other lawyers can easily understand.

I would think that if a federal regulation were to have the effect of 'nulling' a local ordinence then there is no reason or need for the local committie to 'alter' their regulations. They're already altered by federal mandate. No? I think you may have a valid point somewhere in there, but it escapes me. What are you saying?

I live in a neighborhood that in the past has had deed restrictions. In order for the restrictions to survive there would have had to have been a vote taken and a board installed. This would have had to have taken place within one year of the last parcel of property being sold. Didn't happen and I have an antenna farm on my property.

And - Since when have we moved CB into vhf spectrum? Wasn't OP talking of erecting a CB antenna? Where did VHF log periodic come from? Is this part of the point that I can't quite get a hold of?

In the UK I believe even putting up a TV antenna is against the tenancy rules as some, especially in flats, have to share a communal aerial. I don't know if its different in the States.

Well, let me add or define this problem some. Amp on- transistor starts getting real hot real quick and Will blow fuse.
Amp on and keyed, definate blown fuse. Checked biasing, all resistors,diodes near and around problem transistor, all ok. Removed the transistor and power up amp, no problem. Have not keyed the amp in this state so dont know if it would blow the fuse. Tested trans with dvm in diode check, get readings from base to emitter and base to collector no matter how the test leads are applyed. Ill be the first to admit I am no tech, but it seems to me its shorted internaly some how. As I say, Im no tech, just learning. Any help I can get I can sure use. Thanks again, Bill

Bob,

I have the 5BTV too, and love it. But if he is using it for local, forget it. I have am Imax in a tree about 36 feet high, and the 5BTV ground mounted. The 5BTV gets out all over with DX, but is terrible locally because it is ground mounted.

What is the TIME and FREQUENCY for the above show?
I ain't heard a good 'radio war fun' since the heydays of the 14.313 net wars. Ham radio needs another 'master clown frequency' where one can tune in and have a good laugh.
This keyclown crap is boring, it's much better listening in to the screwbally live on the air where one can have a good belly laugh at them and poke-em-with-a-stick on occasion

Herb and his band of sociopaths were very entertaining.
Only big problem was when some of Herb's sociopaths took things to real life. Herb was well aware he was recruiting dangerous people into his BARF organization. He regarded them as "useful idiots," who did his dirty work for him.

Frank, you're absolutely right. I was so busy laughing about Bill's leakage that I missed the previous statement about the fuse not blowing until the unit went into transmit. I'm in full agreement that the transistor could not have a hard short and if the bias was excessive... it certainly could blow the fuse instantly.

Here across the big pond we have a clause in our constitution called the commerce clause. Congress ruled that a homeowners association could not pass rules and regulations restricting federal commerce.
Over the air television is regulated by the FCC, a federal agency, and therefore restricting outside antennae at one's personal residence was against the US Constitution. This did apply to residential single family dwellings. Apartment complexes did not fall under this ruling.

Here in the US many deed restricted land usage restricted outside TV antennae for basically aesthetic purposes only. They felt they were quite ugly. That was changed in 1996.

W4ASX RESPONSE TIME, 11/18/2005 to K1MAN Essay ES051115

Open minded, I look for the wisdom, despite the nonsense that preceeded it. In this case, Glenn, rambling masquerading as wisdom is what I read. You'd do well to figure out what you're trying to say before you say it. Readers want to see a topical sentence, not stream of conscience writing. When the writing goes on and on without materiality, then we conclude the writer is over impressed with himself, writers who are generally poor listeners and readers. Such people have difficulty perceiving reality.

I'm afraid, Glenn, that's where you fall in. Many of your statements/conclusions are rife with fallacy, i.e. the fact that someone fails to answer a CW call means he doesn't know the code. A ham for 53 years, I do not answer code because I want to talk sideband. So, by your logic, you question whether I ever knew the code on account of ignoring a cw signal.

And this bit about law. God, Glenn, get a grip. Law is so deep and intoxicating that even the most educated lawyer wouldn't make the claims you do. Only someone who doesn't know what he doesn't know would talk about law the way you do. Being honest, I know of one exception: The jury trial you won against the law professor. Now, that was a case you can be proud of, one you thought about and prepared for. For the most part, however, you're way behind me in law, and I don't fancy myself anything in law. I mean, consider what I don't know: proof of facts, evidence, hearsay exceptions, theories of damages. That's just within in the ambit of what comes immediately to mind; imagine the big iceberg of law under the sea that isn't readily visible.

At least when I write about you, I write on the basis of facts. For example, when I alleged you were a narcissist, I drew directly from your Wife, Bonny. Fact is, you don't know anything about Brian. I can tell you that Brian is one hell of a genius in psychology, rendering my psychological musings child's play.

You are certainly right when you say he sets up institutes and pseudonyms, but don't many of us? My company is called Entertainment Central, a registered dba of my person here in Florida. Don't you have IARN and AARU? I've always thought that the way we Americans market our material is through all kinds of names that are not necessarily our own. In your mind, however, something is wrong when Brian employs traditional Americana.

Glenn, again I reiterate at one point you were on the way up, but you took a wrong turn. You are no great thinker, no great lawyer, a poor writer, a poor communicator, a very, very poor ham, and a mentally disordered individual, growing worse. Take stock of yourself, my friend, and turn it around.

Bob Sherin,
W4ASX

P.S. If you send me material, please publish any response with the same prominence as the original material. Thanks.

You are right about two things, Bob: 1) I don't know anything about Brian Crow, K3VR, and 2) Your iceberg analogy is a very goog one, but, as an engineer, I do understand the scientific reasons why 9/10 of an iceberg remains unseen under the water. I also understand the basic principles that support the other 9/10 of the law, as you correctly state that I do not know. I don't, of course.

Likewise, Bob, you don't know about 9/10 of my legal work or 9/10 of my other work either. This, at best, will have to wait until all of my books are finished and published at www.K1MAN.com as well as in "Scientific American," etc.

My biggest legal case to date, by far, is currently pending in a Maine Superior Court.

Thanks for reading my essay. It was great to hear from you after so many years. God bless you! 73 and GL de K1MAN.

"Great causes are never tried on the merits; but the cause is reduced to particulars to suit the size of the partisans, and the contention is ever hottest on minor matters." - Ralph Waldo Emerson - From his essay "Nature" 1844.

W4ASX Replies, November 21, 2005

What a lame response, Glenn. God, I could tell you that my biggest case is right now, and it will go down in legal history. That it very well. But this doesn't address the level of my legal knowledge nor countless cases of others that are likely more important than mine and better advocated.

What I get from you Glenn is this notion of entitlement, that only other special people can understand you. I may not know 9/10ths of your law any more than you know 9/10ths of mine. However, I do know what I read as public record, and far from good lawyering, it is pitiful, in my view. I see the way you comport yourself as highly disordered.

Let me give you some examples. You take civil matters and put them in the criminal arena. Where do you think you're going to get with all your felony affidavit complaints and those green cards? By making those matters criminal, do you think the U.S. Attorney is going to pursue them? To the contrary, everyone with whom I communicate in privity thinks you're nuts.

A good part of law is in the chosen remedy. Consider: If you have a complaint against a ham interfering with your broadcast, pursue the traditional civil route. Get an injunction. Given good cause, it's a piece of cake and you could join the FCC as an indispensable party (to interpleed).

Your remedy with Riley is the epitome of what not to do from perspectives too numerous to enumerate. If you sincerely believe all the things you allege in the public forum, why not frame it in a 42 USC 1983 federal action, which, designed for the purpose, has teeth? Of course, you're not going to get anywhere unless you learn how to plead, your weakest part (of which I was aware). For, if your pleading doesn't pass muster, the case will go nowhere, like all of your cases, except the Corson one.

Now, permit me to enlighten you about that 9/10ths iceberg of law underneath. It is not governed by engineering formulas. In this case, it is the sheer intoxication that no matter how far you go in law on any given subject, the library is still replete with more. And every subject can be attacked from so many different angles. Far from governed by formulas, it is governed by education: Smart legal people have a notion of what they don't know.

Your very manner of expression about law, Glenn, is arrogant and pompous. What successful advocate would call an FCC NAL with prima facia efficacy puny and anemic? If that is your idea of Soloman's law, you need more than legal help.

Every would-be author wants to be published. The more respected the publication, the better the author looks. So, apparently you have some massive need to tell me to watch for you in Scientific American. Need I tell you to watch for my best seller "Death of a River Pilot?" While I have high hopes, I don't know for sure that it will be a best seller -- or even published, for that matter. Only time will tell. But you've got this need to hype yourself in the present for something that may happen in the future. Has seasonal depression got you down? (I know that Maine isn't the brightest spot at this time of year.)

In the 1950s, I elmered Aaron Fishman, K1BAF, and in recent years he was in fact published in Scientific American regarding the history of sun spot cycles. Not one to promote himself, Aaron just one day sent me the article, whereupon I marvelled at his achievement. He wasn't aware of what an honor it was. Now Aaron is a mensch, not a pompous ass, as, quite honestly, you come off.

Like your stream of consciousness musings, your reply is stilted. Memoirs. Anyone who has a life worth studying can write a memoir, but, from what I know, yours isn't worth reading, and neither is mine. You're far more likely to wind up a classic case study in DSM.

Please pardon me for expressing the thoughts stirring within. Obviously, if you are enamored with marching to the beat of your own, off-beat drummer, proceed! Be assured that I will evaluate any of your prospective writings unprejudiced and with an open heart. To be honest, I like communicating compliments but have the opposite animus based upon the totality of your utterances in the public domain.

Some of the local hams don't like the fact that I clearly state radio is a hobby and I know how to use my power switch! It's a feature I know real well. I was kidding some hams about that a few months ago. Radio. It's all fun if you're willing to f*ck with someone. It can be done one ham, you just have to be careful how you say it.

Just last Tuesday, one of the CB/ham guys was talking up a coffee break at a place called Cactus Willys. He joked he didn't know any cactuses (his word), and when he unkeyed I tossed in, "You wouldn't want to know any cactuses, they're a bunch of pricks!" (on CB, of course! LOL!) I have also been known to say "Repeater time out" when someone finishes a long key-up on the CB. I've broken up the sideband net lots of times. I'm an equal opportunity offender. Folks have learned, toss a barb at me and get one back.

steve zero productions announces the greatest movie ever made about ww2. Starring an all keyclown cast, who play roles of American soldiers that operated ham radios illegally before the war. The keyclowns portray their fathers and grandfathers as they fight their way through Europe to meet up with German keyclown operators and start "piece" negotiations. The truckstop and Venereal disease ward scenes will make you laugh out loud, as these keyclowns show the cost of fighting to meet with the German keyclowns. The scenes where the keyclowns capture enemy keyclowns at rifle point as they order "PANTS DOWN!" are also unforgettable!

1996. Galaxy Electronics Founder Leo Meyerson Asks FCC To Deny K1MAN Renewal

This is a post to QRZ.COM by K3VR and reads as follows:

Leo Meyerson, W0GFQ, is the latest high profile ham to come out publicly about Glenn Baxter's license. You probably remember Leo as the founder of WRL and Galaxy Electronics. Walter Cronkite also came out publicly against Baxter's (ex-k1man) renewal.

In fact, Leo just sent a letter to the FCC about Baxter. You can find the letter and a discussion of Baxter's renewal here:

"Leo Meyerson is an acknowledged pioneer in the field of radio. Leo is the founder of World Radio Laboratories and Galaxy Electronics. Throughout the years Leo has been very active in public service. A life member of the Quarter Century Wireless Association, Leo served as a National Director from 1977 to 1987. In 1991 he was named the QCWA Amateur Member of the year and in 1994 he was inducted into the QCWA Hall of Fame. Leo is also a life member of the American Radio Relay League, Society of Wireless Pioneers, and International Mission Radio Association among other associations. In 1980 Leo was elected a fellow of the Radio Club of America, one of the most prestigious radio clubs in America.

Leo Meyerson is the second radio icon to denounce Glenn Baxter, ex-K1MAN. The other, famous broadcaster Walter Cronkite, has publicly stated that he has experience with Baxter's lack of ethics. Cronkite also called on the FCC to deny renewal of Baxter's amateur radio licenses."

The only "issue" you have at your disposal to play with is my refusal to discuss certain aspects of my military service. Everything else has been dispositioned with references to third party sources that can verify my claims.

That you refuse to use them is your problem, not mine.

And "clathing"...?!?!

More Mark Morgan phonetics?

It will be interesting to see if Markie jumps in and accuses you of "defiling" Dick.

I just mentioned his old call was about to be eligible for reissue, and he (Col. Pagan) went on and on about "defiling" the dead...

Hi James,
The aesthetic argument was why they didn't allow private aerials over here.
I must be honest and say I don't know if this is still the case but it used to be a few years back.

Quite possible.
Do you remember the deep snow in the 1970s and again in the 1990s? I also remember seeing snow once in the summer.

It really must be cold as my cat, a very bushy "medium longhaired", is usually outside about 18 hours a day. He is usually out at night and in the snow, and sometimes disappears for days.
Right now he goes out for a few minutes, maybe an hour to do his business, then he comes back in and curls up for hours.

I suppose they will blame this cold winter on "global warming", just like they do the warm summers. These people are no better than the Jovos, constantly telling us the World is ending.
Going back decades, one warm summer was said to be a sign we were moving closer to the sun,we were all goint to fry. Then a cold winter meant we were drifting away from the sun and were going to freeze. Next came the winds of the late 1980s - "there will be no gales here, Madam" - and that was the end of the World coming.
Now, everything is blamed on global warming... whether it is hot, cold, windy... or just a little different.

Although it has also been said that weather goes in a cycle, much longer than our life-span, this hardly ever gets mentioned. In fact, in one place where it is warming up, people have said they can grow certain crops... again. Suggesting that they are going through a cycle, not the end of the World.

Maybe we should have a blog site.

Here in the UK, we have three main political parties plus several more who get just a few votes. Although it means that a winning party will almost certainly have less than 50% of the vote, it does mean that we have more choice. Even the BNP managed to take some seats.
The problem is that, in a general election, people tend not to vote for the "third" party as the two main ones convince people that it will simply waste their vote and allow the one they do NOT want to get in power. But, what can be more wasted than to vote for anyone other than who you really want in power?
So, maybe too many people vote for who they think can win, rather than who they think should win.

> I oppose Life licensing of the US or anywhere else

I know how the Americans would like to control the World but, as small as England may be, we still set our own rules ;~) Seriously, how would you feel about a longer period like 5 years between renewal? Do you believe this would be a good middle ground for the UK government to take?

I never even heard this Baxter dude, but I'm going to have to tune him in because he's managed to rile people more than a little old pirate radio station ever could.

Means nothing. Lot's of people get complaints. The FCC receives multiple complaints on the same party(s) on a regular basis, commercial included.

That sounds very much like citing The Center for Media Studies to give the false impression the personal opinions on that page are somehow authenticated by the invocation of such Center. Hypocrisy.

The writer above first claims Baxter was merely "accused" of sending spam, then affirms Baxter's guilt by detailing the "unsolicited mailings" which should have read "alleged unsolicited mailings."

I believe that and I'll tell you why. Riley does not enjoy being pinned down and made to answer questions that require specific answers. He would rather hedge and lie instead of admitting he doesn't have the information one seeks or know the answer to one's question. Some of the government types are arrogant pricks these days, forgetting where their salary originates.

Don't just check the components -- physically test your base bias current. If there is no series resistance at the base then at least check the base voltage. And check -both- transistors (without keying the amp, of course).

> Removed

Don't. Assuming it's a push-pull amp (i.e, two transistors) you do -=NOT=- want to key the amp with only one transistor.

Sounds like you checked them in-circuit. Won't work. You have to pull the transistors in order to test them. Ideally, you should pull -bothtransistors and compare them to each other.

Since you little or no experience with these things, you should be aware that ceramic RF transistors are made with Beryllium, a very poisonous material. If the ceramic 'pill' is damaged in any way you could be risking your health.

Just thought you should know.....

Hello, Peter

Not all Americans, I assure you. The religious right feel they have all the answers for everyone. Heck, they can't even agree on which Bible is the correct one LOL.

Here in the U.S., I'd love to see retesting. Heck, I wouldn't mind taking 20 word per minute CW at any time or any theory exam they care to throw my way.

My grandfather was born in Scotland, and my mother's side goes back to England. So I'm only removed from the U.K. by one generation. If I weren't so old, I'd think about applying for a visa ;)

Wait...maybe it's all in a "missing baggage" room at some airport!

Dudly is big on flapping his wings about aviation. Airports are concerned with aviation. Many folks "lose baggage" at airports.
It all kinds of hangs together, donut? :-)

Dud still has missing baggage, though...

Hello, Twist

The FCC has a lot of appointed jobs. If you have a question concerning the FCC, look towards the administration. There are few "engineers" at the FCC. They are lawyers, for the most part, and are charged with getting the most money into the fewest hands possible.

Things have changed since I was the chief engineer of an AM-FM broadcast station. One "chief engineer" around here is a ham. I chat with him at times on the air. He has to service a number of stations (I believe 5 or 6) as they are all owned by the same conglomerate. Even television here is sharing newsfeeds with large radio stations as they are owned by the same parent company. Some local television stations get their feeds from a sister station and the sister station feeds all of the programming to several television stations, eliminating almost all positions from all of the stations except the one that sends the feed. Fewer engineers, fewer broadcasters, fewer folks to pay and the profits flow into the parent. Of course, with cable and satellite programming (I love my Direct TV), there are fewer bucks to be made from advertising. The Internet even suffered a melt-down in advertising revenue a few years back.

Baxter (and I don't agree with him as there are portions of his 'broadcasts' that appear to violate rules) is making a point that the ARRL is, and has been, 'broadcasting' one-way transmissions for years. Plus, he is arguing that some of their 'broadcasts' are commercial in nature.

I'll leave you to research the various arguments on both sides, but have to agree - it is causing a lot of waves. A good break from the usual sexual comments in the various rec.radio groups :))

Sometimes even better than 3 Stooges re-runs!

FREE!!

For advanced techs and serious radio hobbyists, we're now offering a FREE copy of our previously published "CB EPROM DATA BOOK" by Martin Pickering. (EPROM = Erasable Programmable Read Only Memory.) We sold it for many years but it's now out of print. This little manual of 60 illustrated pages is an absolute GEM of CB technical knowledge you'll just never find anywhere else. And it's yours for FREE from our Web site.

This book reveals the secrets of advanced channel programming, and picks up where our "CB PLL DATA BOOK" (www.cbcintl.com/pllbook.htm) leaves off. You'll get a thorough background in how these amazing programmable chips can be used to modify many popular CB PLL circuits for expanded frequency coverage. Covers the basic programming techniques, and even includes real PC board artwork for making EPROM circuits. Sample artwork includes EPROM boards for the popular MB8719, PLL02A, ï¿½PD2824, and ï¿½PD858 PLL circuits.

To see exactly what these books look like, plus all the specific, chapter-by-chapter details, see our Web at:

www.cbcintl.com

Some of the books included are:

BOOK #1: THE "SCREWDRIVER EXPERT'S" GUIDE To Peaking Out & Repairing CB Radios. List $25. The most popular "big dummy's" guide ever published on do-it-yourself CB repairs & modifications. Covers peaking of receivers, transmitters, modulation, mike problems, antenna & SWR problems, detailed frequency modifications for both crystal & PLL radios. Loaded with charts, illustrations, and specific instructions for most brands including the new export models. This latest edition also covers slider and broadbanding tricks, FM conversions, and much more!

BOOK #2: THE CB PLL DATA BOOK. List $20. The only complete reference source on CB PLL synthesizer circuits ever published! Detailed PLL theory explained in layman's terms. How they work, and how to modify them for many more channels. Includes specific PLL block mixing diagrams, truth charts, & IC pin function diagrams for nearly every PLL chip ever used. Covers all the most popular U.S. & export chassis, with specific listings of all models using the chip.

BOOK #3: UNDERSTANDING & REPAIRING CB RADIOS. List $42. Giant 370-page technical book for the professional repairman. Picks up where the "SCREWDRIVER EXPERT'S" GUIDE leaves off. Includes circuit descriptions & troubleshooting guide for 23- & 40-Ch., crystal & PLL, solid-state & tube, AM, FM, SSB, CW, American & export models. Covers test equipment (& where to find it), transistor basics, synthesizers, receivers, transmitters, power supplies, T/R switching, antennas, interference, parts & accessory sources. Over 350 illustrations including schematics, charts, and photos. Huge subject index also lets you look up repairs by symptoms. This is "must" reading for any serious CB technician!

Rabbi Phil,

Before I post the latest exchange, let me address your commentary. Yes, I do go from controversy to controversy, in ham radio because I was apart of the subjects' lives of which I write. I like to think I'm empathetic (see "K1MAN Has a Case"), using the First Amendment to make a difference (see "The Florida Bar is Corrupt, both a newsgroup and an article).

My life at 66 is extremely full: Angelic Wife of 12 years, great grand children, a novel "Death of a River Pilot," slated for publication (hopefully) in the future, from retirement a new business called Entertainment Central, which is more successful than any of my businesses in my "working days.'

Now informed, perhaps you need ask yourself about getting your own life, lest you continue with wasted words on faulty predicates.

Bob Sherin, W4ASX

And now the latest W4ASX/K1MAN Exchange for those interested.

I was going to say, Morse was about in the 1830's but I didn't think Beethoven would have been into it especially as he died in 1827. Still, stranger things have happened...

My tomcats also very bushy but hes a lazy snoozecat anyhows. Got a tail like a squirrel he has. He hardly goes out at all except for pooping in the neighbours garden but he was knocked down and severely injured when he was young so i guess he just feels safer indoors.

Couldnt agree more Pete. They say its going to be the coldest winter in 100 years probably due to global warming... ok.. so why was it so cold 100 years ago? Likewise the summers supposedly getting hotter but i remember 76 and there hasnt been much recently anywhere near that. I wonder why as were supposed to be getting hotter. I dont support the Global Warming issue at all although i do agree, more for the sake of our lungs and general health, that carbon emmisions/ chemical toxins in the air should be lessened and trees replanted. I just see that as common sense though rather than this hyped up "were all going to die" malarky.

Oh, the irony, from a whiny coward (that's you, Butt Cornholer) who hides behind a 50's sci-fi TV character which was cancelled in 1955 and was the last time his mother * didn't * suck a nigger's dick. I bet you even follow in your mommy's footsteps on that score, Commode.

Maybe Val hears code so poorly sent by the Missouri VE that he cannot decode it?

I don't think it's Lloyd. But whoever it is, I wish he'd go apeshit sometimes over the holidays in a shopping mall with a semiauto like that other nutcase did in Oregon last week.
Now that would be fun to watch on CNN!

Didn't take you long to reply. Who's ingesting alcohol? I've to go to work tomorrow morning (like 5:00 AM). What is your excuse?

I've put perfect copy on paper using a manual typewriter at 40 words per minute. A number of minutes' worth. My mention of 40 or 50 words per minute was a reference to some of the wonder boys whose great exploits simply consist of 'cut and paste' on the Internet.

I'm simply saying that a good operator can likely keep up with most folks that are trying to enter original content and not simply pass along a digital picture, or a 'cut-and-paste' from someone else.

Then again, original content might be something you aren't familiar with.

With due regard,
Jim AA2QA

Great stuff, I do enjoy the slap-stick comedy like the Three stooges and even Abbott & Costello, kind of a vaudeville style of humour.

To the contrary, I find 20 meters prime spectrum of interesting hams. Taking a break from business, I had the pleasure of talking all day on 20, only a minor part about the K1MAN story.

I'm glad you raised 20, because Glenn has weighed in within this thread on the subject, decrying its decay.. Contrary to his view, I find 20 meters upbeat. Quite a change from a short time ago when Riley came on board. Respect has replaced disrespect, a decent atmosphere has replaced one which was polluted (now the kids can listen), contesters are as avid as ever, friendly nets are ordinary operations, and hams, for the most part, act courteously toward one another.

In my view, 20 has undergone a sea shift for the better. Diatribes? If that is the way you wish to characterize this type of communication, be my guest.

To the contrary, I find 20 meters prime spectrum of interesting hams.
Taking a break from business, I had the pleasure of talking all day on 20, only a minor part about the K1MAN story.

At the risk, "Preacher", of being characterized as being one of the uninteresting Hams on 20 meters, may I?
Yes, you often do talk "all day on 20". And you talk, and you talk, and you talk. At the end of the day, Bob, you have spent hours talking, and in the process you actually say little.

Yes, previous posters are, in the vernacular, 'right on the money' when they comment that many of them have made it a habit to spin their VFO to another frequency when you arrive on scene. Why do you suppose this is, Bob?
Obviously what you have to say/bloviate is of little to no importance to the majority of Hams within earshot of you, but that hardly gave you reason to pause, did it? You blab on, undeterred, and are somehow convinced that you are offering something of interest and value.

And, Bob? Please DO try to be just a tad bit less verbose. I realize that you fancy yourself as a wordsmith, but try, at least, to keep your vocabulary within the context of what it is you are attempting to convey.
You are, for the most part, not dazzling any of us with your attempts at brilliance.
In my view, 20 has undergone a sea shift for the better. Diatribes?
If that is the way you wish to characterize this type of communication, be my guest.

Yes, Bob. In your view I am sure it has. Meanwhile, Bob, many of us will continue to do as we have been doing when we hear you on 20M. Turn you off.

steve zero productions announces the greatest movie ever made about ww2. Starring an all keyclown cast, who play roles of American soldiers that operated ham radios illegally before the war. The keyclowns portray their fathers and grandfathers as they fight their way through Europe to meet up with German keyclown operators and start "piece" negotiations. The truckstop and Venereal disease ward scenes will make you laugh out loud, as these keyclowns show the cost of fighting to meet with the German keyclowns. The scenes where the keyclowns capture enemy keyclowns at rifle point as they order "PANTS DOWN!" are also unforgettable!

I am sure there are a LOT of floppies in your life, Frankie, your Marine Corps "career" among them.

Until then, you have yet to even come close to a "point" other than making stuff up.

Perhaps you should consider a career in writing children's tales?
You've already demonstrated a talent for fiction. Just finding an appropriate target audience may be a bit challenging for you, though.

Nope.

Your buddy Frankie is LYING to you, Markie, as he is everyone else he want's to have believe his tales!

Frank Gilliland has already been proven (by his own admission) to have been a "####bird PFC". In other words he was deadweight while he Yep.

Did it right there in the paragraph you "snipped", yet followed up with a comment, Markie.

Frankie insisted that the Marines DON'T have Military Police...Just "Shore Patrol", yet the USMC has a whole MOS Occupational Field dedicted to it.

HOW TO SLAP SISSY KEYCLOWNS IN THE WALLET WHEN THEY TRY SELLING THEIR ILLEGAL GARBAGE ON EBAY!

Log into ebay as you normally would and get ready to browse for illegal keyclown items! Keep the illegal keyclown equipment auction numbers you find in a text file.

Open a second browser and log on again. This time, use it to do the following:

Surf on over to http://pages.ebay.com/securitycenter/index.html
1. select "Report another problem"
2. click "Report problem"

This will take you to a page with 3 windows:
1. In the top window, select:"report a listing policy violation or prohibited (banned) item"
2. In middle window, select "Prohibited (banned) items"
3. In bottom window, select "electronics"
4. click "continue"

Now you will be on the "Contact us" page. Click on "email".

This will take you to a page to email Ebay security about the illegal keyclown equipment you find.
1. Type in the number of the auction that you want to rat out. You can type in up to 10 auctions, so cruise around your favorite place on Ebay to find illegal keyclown equipment and fill the box up! Type in the numbers like this: 000000000,00000001,000000002, etc. No gaps between the commas and the next number.
2. Before hitting the "send" button, make sure to copy/paste your ratouts to a text file. You want to save them so you can post them in the rec.radio.cb newsgroup. This is a public service to the legal CB'ers, who want all this keyclown gear eradicated. It also has a great side effect of getting keyclowns to squeal, call you names, and otherwise complain. They hate it when they get their clocks cleaned like this.
3. Now, you are ready to do your duty as a ham or a CB'er, and show that you are not a keyclown operator like they are. Click "send"!

Repeat as many times for as many days as you want, keep those keyclowns whining like the sissies they are!

Happy Anti-Keyclowning!

PS: Below are some recently ratted out ebay auctions. Rat them out again! There is strength in numbers, and the more people ratting them out the more they may just get off their butts and do something!

Ebay is but a tiny drop of the illegal/foreign equipment trade.
The majority of illegal equipment is bought/sold/traded at hamfest boneyards (yes, ham boneyards), flea markets, and over the air. Also, many legit storefronts deal in illegal equipment, if you know how to ask for it. I would say more, but I don't want to give k4kwh an orgasim.

Blah, Blah,

Turn me off; that is surely your prerogative. Based upon my results, though, for every individual exercising your type of disgression, there are hundreds who call, talk and befriend. My cup runneth over.

Now the latest on K1MAN as of November 23, 2005

K1MAN email to Riley Hollingsworth, Esq, FCC of November 22, 2005

"you QSYed to 14.313 so as to wipe out everyone up there! You were in clear violation of FCC rules by using more power than required to maintain your amateur radio communications, and you deserve a $22,000 NAL!"

Last night, troubled by the K1MAN email to the FCC, I mulled it. And what I came up with is dispositive of K1MAN's final disposition. Not one to readily use the word lie, meaning misrepresentation with scienter, I'm compelled to write that K1MAN's intention yesterday was to deceive the FCC.

Here's why. "you QSYed (changed frequency) so as to wipe out everyone up there!" Here K1MAN arrogates unto himself knowledge of intentional interference and charges that I went on 14.313 to "wipe out everyone up there." Nothing could be further from the truth. I made one transmission there: "Is this frequency occupied?" When the answer was affirmative, I moved.

By making a false charge and failing to produce the mitigating or exculpatory information of what, in fact, happened, K1MAN, who holds himself out as a ham radio leader, maliciously misleads our regulator, the FCC. Where a good part of ham radio is voluntary compliance and cooperation in the resolution of problems, K1MAN does not possess the moral character to be part of this colossus..

If this were his only transgression, a fair minded person might be prone to let it slide with a slap on the wrist. However, the on-air course of his performance shows that his conduct here is but a minor part thereof.

Please make this part of the K1MAN record at the FCC.

To the contrary, I find 20 meters prime spectrum of interesting hams. Taking a break from business, I had the pleasure of talking all day on 20, only a minor part about the K1MAN story.

At the risk, "Preacher", of being characterized as being one of the uninteresting Hams on 20 meters, may I?
Yes, you often do talk "all day on 20". And you talk, and you talk, and you talk. At the end of the day, Bob, you have spent hours talking, and in the process you actually say little.

Yes, previous posters are, in the vernacular, 'right on the money' when they comment that many of them have made it a habit to spin their VFO to another frequency when you arrive on scene. Why do you suppose this is, Bob?
Obviously what you have to say/bloviate is of little to no importance to the majority of Hams within earshot of you, but that hardly gave you reason to pause, did it? You blab on, undeterred, and are somehow convinced that you are offering something of interest and value.

And, Bob? Please DO try to be just a tad bit less verbose. I realize that you fancy yourself as a wordsmith, but try, at least, to keep your vocabulary within the context of what it is you are attempting to convey.
You are, for the most part, not dazzling any of us with your attempts at brilliance.
In my view, 20 has undergone a sea shift for the better. Diatribes?
If that is the way you wish to characterize this type of communication,

be my guest.

Bob Sherin, W4ASX

Yes, Bob. In your view I am sure it has. Meanwhile, Bob, many of us will continue to do as we have been doing when we hear you on 20M. Turn you off.

W4ASX Replies 11/23/2005

Blah Blah Blah,

Thank you for your post. I especially appreciate it because your points and position, well expressed, are clear.

Pluralism, the concept essentially of "different strokes for different folks" is the responsive topical sentence. For sure, the realization is there that not everyone is interested in the subject-matter of my posts. Also, that writing, as an art form, is challenging. What turns me on is to sink my teeth into a story of which I have unique knowlege and try to reach an audience with that knowledge who come away entertained and better informed.

Well understood is the difficulty of word-smithing. For our language is so very rich when wielded to its full extent. All words have semantical frameworks, so the choice is exacting. Does my effort to write mean I'm a great writer? No. Ever since trying to go beyond myself in writing 30 years ago, I've struggled to improve, marvelling at those successful people whose text leaps off the page.

Notwithstanding, I think through my posts, spend time editing, read responses with arespect, then try to participate, changing according to the input coming back.

If you put my call and name into a newsgroup search, you'd be surprised with the results. This isn't the only place nor subject on which I post. I've posted in groups on religion and law as well. I'm also a published author in publications too numerous to list here, but here are some: The Miami Herald, The Miami News, Computer World, Datamation, the Westside Gazette, Florida Skip, South Florida Business Journal.

I was paid for some of the articles. So to tell me, I'm not read is clearly false. I know I'm read from your responsive posts, calls, emails, and knowledge people often show who communicate with me. You can also read it on the Net: One ham posted (about the KV4FZ story): to understand the KV4FZ story, "see Bob Sherin, W4ASX's work."

More, to critcize operation on ham radio is self defeating. If we need anything, we need to get the hams out and on the air, whether it be code, rag chewing or contests. To characterize my operation on ham radio is a waste of time in the face of my disclosure that I'm up to my ears in business and use this collosssus for relaxation, is a misrepresentation. The fact is, I'm not on much of the time when I'm on the road doing gigs.

Whatever your opinions, fellow hams, have a happy holiday, at a time when I have 3 gigs scheduled, moving my 85 pound Peavy speakers and sound systems around. You enjoy while I work.

A fantastic tale in its day but back to present day what is the benefit? I think you will find most people will know you can say anything via Morse just like you can talking so being amazed at what can be passed via Morse seems a strange thing to highlight. You can pass much more information by talking. In the past fair enough but times have moved on. Morse is now an out-dated form of communication practised now by just radio Amateurs.
To any Amateurs who like Morse then that's fine for them. They will learn it and use it where they like and I have no problems at all about that. But... to ramble on about it constantly and belittle anyone not really interested in "just the Morse" side of radio is a bit unfair branding them as inferior radio users (not aimed at you personally here) Amateur radio can still be a fascinating Hobby without it, or as I would like, not a forced issue but one of choice.

Graham

If that is adiquate then whats wrong with cut and paste? Only an idiot would sit there re-typing out something that could just as easily be cut and pasted unless it was an original work of course.

> I'm simply saying that a good operator can likely keep up with most folks

A good operator? Depends on your impression of a good operator. A good operator to me is someone who uses the radio sensibly, stays legal and cares about interference and deals with it if caused. Someone who goes on about ooh i can do this or i can do that trying to put themselves above other operators in my opinion have a vanity problem. As far as pictures go id rather use the internet as its a more appropriate media for that.

Thread Readers,

Please be aware that the pseudonyms above may likely be one person, a K1MAN supporter, who, unable to meet the subject-matter, is attempting to undermine and detract from the posts. When a pseudonym is pitted against a real person, a ham, with a real name, the discussion is biased, because while the unidentifed knows about the reality of the opposing poster, the identified poster doesn't have a provable clue nor can he assume with whom he is debating.

Permit me, for a moment, to point out how this relates to the above post about 75 meter operations. Though I haven't been down there in years, there was a time when I was very much into 75 meters, primarily because, like many others, it gave me an opportunity to design, build and test low band antennas.

To be honest, I never felt comfortable on 75 meters, nor did I feel that I fit in for the most part. There were groups, however, in which I enjoyed participating, like the Knights of the Round Table. The above poster knows all this, so taking advantage of his knowledge, he delivers a cheap shot. And because he remains incognito, there can be no impeachable dialogue back.

This is why anonymous posts sully real reporting on these Newsgroups. They can impart a wholly false impression -- of many against one when the many is actually only one, of innuendo when the issue raised by the poster cannot be related to the poster's actual behavior, or wholly fabricated information designed to discredit is disseminated behind a mask of anonymity.

I ask only readers that you ponder the subject-matter of this thread and not the tangential calumny, invective, rumor and half baked truths. This is an important story to ham radio, one in which I've been joined and outdone by the masterful and all-encompassing research of K3VR, Brian.

Hello, Graham

I also do not see the need to force cw on anyone. Still, when one attempts to tell me that more information can be passed via voice, I can only agree if the communications is something like "meet me at Joe's bar at 10:00 PM".

If there is something like "medium pizza with cheeze and sausage to 1235 W. Cauncy Blvd", then someone is going to have to write down that information. This will slow the maximum data transfer to what can be put on paper. Assuming one is not connected to the Internet where they can simply print the information, I must admit that I cannot print nor write as fast as I can copy cw to a keyboard (or typewriter). In that case, cw might be as efficient as anything else. This is, of course, a questionable case.

The time I mentioned (the perfect copy at 40) was a weather bulletin which gave latitude, longitude, and a multitude of other data to boot. This could, of course, be transmitted by voice, but would absolutely have to be put on paper (unless someone had a photographic memory that never made a mistake). In that case, sans digital data transmission (citor, amtor, teletype, or whatever), voice could not possibly be faster as it had to be put to paper.

In this case, the limit would be how fast this could be transcribed to paper.

In closing, I would reiterate that I agree about cw should not be a forced issue. My only issue is that some folks feel that it is terribly slow. Compared to the Internet or other digital transmissions, sure. Compared to voice .... it all depends ;)

steveo wants me to be his gay lover. thats why he always attacks n8 &
kc8. i tried to tell steveo just because i jacked off with him one time doesn't mean i'm gay. now he thinks if he posts sick shit about kc8 & n8 i will be his lover.

you have to understand steveo is very upset with these two fine people.
n8 outted steveo for the coward he is. remember dayton? n8 was there waiting for steveo to carry out his threats. steveo proved to be the coward we all know him to be. now his only way to feel like a man is to post lies about n8 & kc8. two fine hams who have given so much to the amateur radio community.

poor little steveo.....must suck to be you. oh, sorry i forgot.
you do suck!

Well Markie, so far there have been at least two other people who've been able to corroborate what I've said, and found it to be true.

So the ONLY reason for YOU not doing the same thing is COWARDICE!

What "more data"...?!?!?

Hans just dropped a letter to a relative and the MCO on uniforms came up.

Sure they can!

Frankie's BS about the USMC has already been disproven, starting with uniforms and the existance of a Military Police MOS, and I didn't even need to THINK about my SSN, let alone reveal it!

No, there's absolutley nothing wrong for "the lower ranks".

I exhibited NOT ONE IOTA of disrespect based upon "rank".

My "disrespect" is for a lying, deceitful, can't carry himself honorably for ONE enlistment punk.

"dedicated"

And that's something you're -proud- to admit? Think about it for a sec, Dud..... do you really think that a shitbird PFC, after going through two courts-martial and spending time in the brig, doesn't know that the Marine Corps doesn't have MP's? Gawd you are dumb. I guess I have to explain it to you on a third-grade level:

I baited you, Dud. I wanted to see if you were willing to prove me wrong if you had the chance, so I gave you the chance. You took the bait, hook, line, sinker, and half the dock. IOW, you just proved that if you -did- have proof of your 'career' in the Corps, you would not only have posted it, you would be trying to shove it down my throat at every opportunity -- just like you are doing with the MP/SP issue.

But go right ahead and rejoice in your imaginary victory, Major Dud.

Let's see if you are still unwilling to address the issues.......

You didn't know that avionics techs (your alleged MOS) are regularly deployed with the FMF.

You didn't know about the VINSON system. To wit: "I know who Col Vinson was and I know where Ft Gordon is. Never served with him/for him/within 100 miles of him." Neither did you know that the VINSON system replaced almost all outdated crypto systems in the late '70's, including the old punch-pin monsters (KY-28/38 of the NESTOR system, which had been almost completely replaced by the VINSON system by the early '80's).

You didn't know the difference between a 'hitch', a 'cruise', and a 'float'.

You mistakenly assumed the origination of the phrase "One Shot One Kill" was from the Army Sniper School; wrongfully presumed that it is a tactic taught to all Marine recruits; then proceeded to demonstrate your ignorance about basic combat tactics, the use of shotguns, and the very common 40mm grenade launchers (M-79 & M-203).

You claimed that "the only targets used to train Marine riflemen (and all recruits) [are] head shots and 'center mast', or chest shots", but didn't know that the standard round marksmanship-type targets are also used, and much more often than "dog" targets. In fact, most of rifle qualification is done with the round targets. But you didn't know that despite your claim to have "[taken] home an 'Rifle Expert' on each and every trip to the range".

You didn't know that only the results of an Article 15 proceeding are recorded, not the entire proceedings; and you don't even know what page in the SRB they are recorded.

You didn't know that Marines are often prohibited from taking any off-duty employment, nor did you know that such a decision is usually made by the CO, not HQMC.

You didn't know that outside communications can be prohibited during a base lock-down or unit activation.

You defined a 'chit' as "A Naval term for a 'permission slip'", when in fact it means -any- piece of paper with something written on it.

You didn't know that a dishonorable discharge can only be given as a result of a conviction in a General court-martial, and is usually given after a few years at Leavenworth and a reduction to Private.

You didn't know that the Corps doesn't use cutting scores for promotions.

You misquoted your SIX alleged promotion certificates (a misquote that I later found on google verbatim).

You didn't understand that "years and months in specialty" (box 11 on the DD-214) is not the same as time in service, yet claimed that you have -several- DD-214's.

You claimed that time on the delayed entry program was considered to be time in reserve status but never was.

You stated that "My DD-214 says 'Honorable'...", yet after 1979 there is no box on the form to designate character of service. The DD-214 is only a "release or discharge from active duty", not a final discharge certificate. Only that latter will denote the character of service.

You claimed to have served from 03 September, 1974 to 29 May, 1992. That's only 17 years and 9 months. Yet you also claim to be retired, which can only happen if you served 20 years. You also claimed to have been discharged for medical reasons, having your discharge later upgraded (a claim which you have both denied and acknowledged). You didn't know that medical discharges cannot be upgraded, nor that time not served cannot be arbitrarily added to the end of an enlistment in order to obtain retirement benefits.

And once again: With all your careers, activities and obligations, where do you find the time to post as much as you do on Usenet?

Well?

Since Major Dud can't hold himself to the same standards that he

Frankie, PERHAPS if you had learned early in your life how to prioritize your activities and your daily obligations-vs-preferences, you MIGHT have found time to be the Marine you now fancy yourself as having been.

Instead, you wound up as an also-ran trying to salve his bruised ego at the expense of someone who DID learn how to do those things.

I pity you, really...

I managed to be able to do the things I want.

You never managed to do the things you need to.

I understand "the issues" just fine, Frankie.

You made the stupid comments and I bloodied your nose with them.

You've tripped yourself up SEVERAL times now trying to salve your ego and "make fun" of me, only to get it fed back to you.

You were useless when you were in the Corps, you're even less than useless now.

The ONLY thing you've gotten right so far was categorizing yourself as a ####bird.

If one knows music notation, it can be expressed even more simply by the ratio of note lengths. For example, a dotted eighth relative to a sixteenth note has the same lenghth ratio as a dash to a dot. Other notations with the same length ratios are dotted quarters versus eighths and dotted halves versus quarters. So the letter C could be any of the three following notations.

Dotted eighth, sixteenth, dotted eighth, sixteenth Dotted quarter, eighth, dotted quarter, eighth Dotted half, quarter, dotted half, quarter

The dotted half and quarter would be more representative than a straight half and quarter since the ratio of dot to dash length is 3 to 1 rather than 2 to one.

Or you could use straight quarters with triplet eighths as another approach to get the 3 to one ratio.

Hello All:

http://cgi.ebay.com/QRO-HF-2500DX-Linear-Amplifier-Brand-New-Never-Used_W0QQitemZ5833225062QQcategoryZ48700QQrdZ1QQcmdZViewItem

Here is a QRO HF-2500 DX Linear Amplifier, GREAT!

This amp can be modified to have a small step up transformer, in the input circuit, just like the Pride DX-300 that uses a step up transformer. Allowing a stock radio to drive the amp to its full output, PLUS! But the Pride DX-300 only uses a single 4CX250, with a 500 to 700 watt output with a fresh tube.

The Pride DX-300 is at http://www.cbtricks.com/ click on amp info, then Pride.

The QRO HF-2500 DX uses two each 4CX800 Tubes, and with the right little mod to add a step up transformer in the input circuit like the Pride has, I am sure the 2500 watt scale on the Bird would be buried with just a stock radio. Isn't Technology GREAT!

Would make a great project, clean output with low drive, oh yeah! Think about all those cheap crappie amps blowing a fuse, shorting out the high voltage, smoking up the house, and the costly repairs, sweep tubes at 80 dollars a piece, TILT! In would be money well invested, in the long run.

I am gonna send Santa an e-mail asking for one.

Or maybe ya could put a set of 4CX800 Tubes in a Pride DX-300 with a separate power supply, now that I would pay to see. Or a set of 4CX400 Tubes, another great project!

Happy Thanksgiven to all and God Bless.

Jay in the Great Mojave Desert, ...just down the road ah ways from the fillin station.

Miss Dinah down at the fillin station says Heah to everyone, must have got her antenna up and running, sounds good!

I should get my license just so I can buy linears legally.......then sell them illegally :)

COBRA 2000 GTL

1) Cut R44 and D52.Find R174 and jump it .

2)Follow the YELLOW wire from the clarifier knob and cut it just before it connects to the PCB.Take this wire and solder it to Ground.

3)Find the RED wire from the clarifier and cut it the same.Then solder it to pin
#3 of the mb3756 ic.

4)Cut the brown wire off the clarifier knob.

Hello Me:

Way more Bitchen! 3 Tubes instaed of 2 4CX800 Tubes.

Now we will be crowden the 5KW slug scale, hehehhehee

Same step up transformer will work. I think they use a 9 to 1 step up and use a 450 ohm none inductive resistor as the load, which is a good as the impedance step up is now 450 ohms. Simply ingenious.

There ah yellin fer dinner, if my computer is taken over by small children that should have sold on E-Bay, you will know whats ah happin!

NO.
You absolutely MUST use a proper, regulated power supply. Anything else will either damage the supply, the CB radio or both.

For more information about UK CB and what you need, try this site...
http://www.citizensband.radiouk.com/ukcb/
There is also a dealer database, so you could look to see if there is a dealer near you.

What a fantastic footballer he was and no doubt. He had it all and due to his drinking problem he flushed his life down the toilet. Many people have absolutely no sympathy for George due to his scant disregard to his health and promises made to receive a liver transplant, above many others, to give him a second chance and returning to the evils of drink soon after.
Even so, he had a problem he couldn't control and he will be greatly missed by many. The UK has lost a sporting legend. May his memory live on forever...

With Deepest condolences,
Graham

Sorry, but I believe that was the passing of a 'soccer' (football)

Bar door swings open; KB9RQZ walks in wearing his tightest leather pants.
K4YZ: Hi KB9RQZ! How is it hanging!
KB9RQZ: Pretty good, check it out.
(KB9RQZ drops his pants, revealing his pink g-string) K4YZ: Not bad big guy. I get to see more later, right?
KB9RQZ: You will have to ask KC8LDO, I promised him first crack at
it. Is that a new tattoo on our arm?
K4YZ: Yes, just got it last week.
(K4YZs rolls his sleeve the rest of the way up to reveal a swastika)
KB9RQZ: Why did you get that?
K4YZ: I am tired of people thinking I am a wimp, call it intimidation.
KB9RQZ: Did you stop buy and pick up the Videos for the get together tonight?
K4YZ: I picked up N8WWMs favorite, deep anal slam.
KB9RQZ: Speaking of N8WWM, he was supposed to be here.
K4YZ: He called me earlier, he had to go to some kind of parole hearing.
KB9RQZ: I told him not to involved with women, we could treat him better than any women ever thought of doing.
K4YZ: Hey look, KC8LOD just walked in.
KB9RQZ: I just love it when he wears his bare midriff shirt.
KC8LDO: Hi guys, whats up?
K4YZ: Waiting for you and N8WWM.
KC8LDO: He was just driving in the parking lot when I came in.
N8WWM: Hi Guys, I finally made it.
KB9RQZ: How did your hearing go?
N8WWM: Bad, they actually expect you take care of your kids and support them.
KC8LDO: See, we told you about women.
N8WWM: I know, I know. I'm done with them.
KB9RQZ: What's in the bag?
N8WWM: I was hungry, stopped of at Coney express and picked up a "dog" (N8WWM opens the bag and pulls out a foot long hot dog, which falls on the floor and rolls under the table) KB9RQZ: It's mine, I saw it first (KB9RQZ and KC8LDO start wrestling for it, KC8LDO trying to bite it, KB9RQZ trying to stick it up his butt) KC8LDO: NO, It's mine.

N8WWM: Here, cut it in half, then you will both be happy.
K4YZ: I can't believe you two, it's all covered with dirt.
KB9RQZ: Reminds me of the time N8WWM and I went to the beach.
N8WWM: Yeah, I remember that time, took me a week to heal up.
KC8LDO: N8WWM, what's the deal with that picture that Steve took of you? You looked terrible, did you just roll out of bed?
N8WWM: No, I was in the middle of something.
KB9RQZ: Middle of what?
N8WWM: Jamming a repeater. Guess that will teach them to make fun of me because of my no-code status.
K4YZ: Don't you ever learn? You have already been spanked for that.
N8WWM: Speaking of spanking, are we ready to leave yet? KB9RQZ's G-string is really turning me on.
KC8LDO: Think his is cute, check this out.
(Drops pants to reveal an "elephant trunk" G-string.
N8WWM: My God! Lets go, elephants do like nuts don't they?
(N8WWM Giggles and heads for the door)
KC8LDO, KB9RQZ and K4YZ follow him out the door.

The question and answer below was posted in another forum. Is the answer correct? Did the 23 channel radios effectively lose type acceptance circa 1987 and are not supposed to be used on CB after that time?

Question:
I've heard about that from time to time but never understood - why are 23-channel CBs illegal to sell?
Answer:
Because they are no longer type accepted. Anything after 1987 that is a 23 Ch rig is no longer type accepted and can no longer be sold, traded, given away, or of course used on the air.. But try to tell that to all the guys that collect the old Trams and Brownings!

From ARNewsline #1476:

THAT FINAL ITEM: THEY CALL IT BGPL

And finally this week, another player has entered the broadband access arena. A a San Diego, California company called Nethercomm is developing a way to use ultra wideband wireless signals to transmit data at broadband speeds through natural-gas pipes. Jim Linton, VK3PC, has the rather strange details:

The catch-cry of late comic actor Jimmy Durante was to say, "Everybody's trying to get into the act!" But today that's exactly how to describe the latest pipe-dream broadband delivery idea.

A United States company is proposing to use ultra wideband wireless signals to transmit data at broadband speeds. But here's the interesting part, the transmission medium will be the pipes that carry natural gas. The company claims its yet to be tested technology could offer 100 megabits per second to every home - more than enough to provide voice, video and high-speed Internet access.

Just like the promises made by BPL promoters that they can revolutionize the power industry, the same type of hype is likely to be associated with broadband over gas pipeline or BGPL.

I'm Jim Linton VK3PC for the Amateur Radio Newsline.

It all but boggles ones mind as to who will be next to try and get into the broadband access industry. Perhaps your local water company or sewerage authority? Only time will tell. More is on-line at

http://www.nethercomm.com/

40 channels radios became legal on January 1, 1977, 10 years before 1987.

I believe you can no longer sell, trade or give away 23 channel radios, but you _can_ sell the microphone and leave the radio attached!

They didn't lose their type acceptance. They are grandfathered. All the other rules apply. If you modify them to get the other 17 (or more) channels from them you lose your authority to operate it. Same as any other transmitter adjustment that results in more then 4 watts carrier or greater then 90/95% modulation.

If the radio you're running is clean and clear and not bothering anybody, just go ahead and use it. If you start getting complaints, don't ignore them.
Chances are real good, you'll lose.

Happy radioing!

I drew over 90 amps with an internally fortified, strapped 667-V.
I guess you had trouble supplying over 700 amps of juice to it!

700 amps x 14 volts = 9800 watts.
Real efficient. Does that heat your vehicle in the winter?

An individual can still sell or buy a 23 channel radio from another individual.

From ARNewsline #1476:

THAT FINAL ITEM: THEY CALL IT BGPL

And finally this week, another player has entered the broadband access arena. A a San Diego, California company called Nethercomm is developing a way to use ultra wideband wireless signals to transmit data at broadband speeds through natural-gas pipes. Jim Linton, VK3PC, has the rather strange details:

The catch-cry of late comic actor Jimmy Durante was to say, "Everybody's trying to get into the act!" But today that's exactly how to describe the latest pipe-dream broadband delivery idea.

A United States company is proposing to use ultra wideband wireless signals to transmit data at broadband speeds. But here's the interesting part, the transmission medium will be the pipes that carry natural gas. The company claims its yet to be tested technology could offer 100 megabits per second to every home - more than enough to provide voice, video and high-speed Internet access.

Just like the promises made by BPL promoters that they can revolutionize the power industry, the same type of hype is likely to be associated with broadband over gas pipeline or BGPL.

I'm Jim Linton VK3PC for the Amateur Radio Newsline.

It all but boggles ones mind as to who will be next to try and get into the broadband access industry. Perhaps your local water company or sewerage authority? Only time will tell. More is on-line at

http://www.nethercomm.com/

This was floating around here about two months ago.
It is determined to be a hoax.

You're heard it debunked here first!

Still, somebody put some thought into that website even if it is BS!

They must have a lot of folks fooled, a google search on Nethercomm gets a lot of hits.

I suppose all one has to do is turn on the gas range and log on.

That's exactly why It's time to sell. Do you know what it cost's to keep 650 amps on this sucka. Not to mention the drivers.

Did you see the first in the new series of Little Britain?
All day, the top news was that the new series was starting. The following day, top news was the ratings... 9 million viewers. At this rate, it may overtake the soaps.

Oh my, the roly-polies in that naked fight scene. I had to look away to avoid throwing up at the sight of it.

One of the problems with being famous is that you cannot take a dump without someone taking a photo and making some headline out of it. There are people in this country who believe that members of the royal family should not act like us mere mortals.

Considering the publicity over talking to plants, speaking his mind about architecture and having a rather different "garden shed", I am surprised that the press have not made more of his membership to that association.
I am sure that they could have made some great headline involving the routine he used to gain membership... anything involving a member of the royal family
"palming his balls" has to be a wonderful headline.

Peter.

The thing is why would you want a 23 channel radio? Collectors I can understand but not an average CB user. I see a few from time to time on sale on eBay and some fetch reasonable money. I remember back in the UK in 1980 a lad lived across the road from my then girlfriend and he had a 23 channel radio. We always went to channel 24 just to wind him up... I guess im just evil.. lol.

I would think many people would read this then go straight to a websearch to see if its true. Then if there's a website out there they believe it. One thing comes to mind, electronic signals down a gas pipe.. KERBOOM.....or doesn't it work like that ;o)

It never ceases to amaze me the amount of people who still believe you have to cut your co-ax in multiples of a certain length to get a good SWR. I always go down to the local CB shop and buy a tin of SWR paint. Two coats of this stuff and your SWR is down perfect. At $40 a tin its a bit expensive but it can do upto 10 average size homebase antennas. I hear there's a new type out next year for mobile steel antenna. We all look forward to that ;o)

Graham

Hello All:

Left Hand Lane Larry and Insane Dwane are driving thier work vans to the TRW swap meet today. This will save everyone gas, and we will have a blast on the way down and back. But a few bucks towards thier gas will be appreciated.

Pleanty of room in the back for all those big linears..... Wyane's Van has a luggage rack on top for antennas and such!

Breakfeast at the Denny's after the swap meet.

38LSB and 435 simplex are the frequencies.

Hello Scott in Baltimore:

One of the major problems with any type of data transmission over the power lines (BPL), or even the gas line is, the fact that it modifies the existing power grid system.

Therefore modifying the power grid systems maintenance requirements. The power grid maintenance costs have not been fully investigated and are NOT known. I am sure they have been forecasted from a pretty colored slide being shown on a screen during BPL Presentations at the Power Companies, during a luncheon. And showing inflated profit margins, from pro BPL Dudes.

But real world maintenance costs can not be forecast without some time on a power grid system, and experience.

Bean counters would have to monitor the maintenance costs over time. And I am sure the installation costs, increased maintenance costs, and extra maintenance test equipment and training (maybe even new employee's) will be cost prohibitive as compared to the added income to power companies.

BPL is second hand Technology, it will die and go away.

Now with BgPL, I wonder if I can get my Propane Tank out in the back yard to have a 100 Meg data rate?!??!?!?!??.....

The Communications Act of 1996 strtikes down the blacket Clause of "No Outside Antennae". It does not state that an association can not restrict against outside antennae. The clause "no Outide Antenna" is to general. Furhtermore the law also sets forth what antennae that can not be restricted. These are antennae th at are designed to receive over the air television broadcast and direct satellite televison recption.

A homeowners association/ deed restrictions can clarify the struck down provsion of "No Outside Antennae" by writing regulations and or deed restriction that specify what is and what is not acceptable.

You need to check with a lawyer and reveiw your deed restrictions carefully before you do anything. The one certainty that I can say is if yo uwish to install a 30 cm direct TV dish on you property that is deed restricted, that deed restriction has been nulified. It does not give you the right to install a 80 foot tower and put up a phased array of 8 element yagis for CB or any other CB antennae.

From ARNewsline #1476:

ENFORCEMENT: WRL / GALAXY ELECTRONICS FOUNDER MEYERSON ASKS FCC NOT TO RENEW K1MAN'S LICENSE

Another well known ham has written to the FCC asking the agency not to renew the license of American Amateur Radio Association founder Glen Baxter, K1MAN. In a letter to FCC rules enforcer Riley Hollingsworth that's been posted in cyberspace, Leo I. Meyerson, W0GFQ, charges that Baxter has been distributing unsolicited commercial e-mail that uses his name to promote business interests. He goes on to say that his now public letter is intended to let the FCC and the public know that Baxter has no authorization to use his name, photo nor that of Meyerson's wife. Nor does he support any of Baxter's activities, business or otherwise.

For those of you new to the hobby, Leo Meyerson, W0GFQ, is a walking legend. He was the founder of World Radio Laboratories and Galaxy Electronics. His simple but effective Globe Chief and Globe Scout transmitters were the first station for many new hams in the 1940's, 50's and 60's. He was also among the first to bring high frequency transceivers to ham radio through his Galaxy product line.

Meyerson's letter goes on to say that he is aware that the FCC has issued a $21,000 Notice of Apparent Liability against Baxter's Amateur Radio station. He ends by asking the Commisson to not renew Baxter's license which has been set aside by the FCC.

Meyerson's letter to the FCC concerning Baxter's pending license renewal is the second such note this year. As previously reported, retired CBS Newsman Walter Cronkite, KB2GSD, wrote the FCC last June after Baxter allegedl;y refused to stop using 1996 era promotional material containing Cronkite's voice. Massachusetts Governor Mitt Romney dismissed the role of Amateur Radio operators in emergency communications during a televised "town meeting" program on WCVB's "When Disaster Strikes: Segment Two." The program featured public safety and volunteer organization officials from across Massachusetts among its audience.

Host and moderator Natalie Jacobson asked an increasingly-agitated Governor Romney questions about communications interoperability, and communication without commercial power. Romney was next asked by Jacobson, "...so does it come down to ham radio?..."

The Governor replied in a disgusted tone, "No, we don't need to deal with ham radio operators..."

Embarrassed public safety officials later tried to put in a good word for Amateur Radio. National Weather Service Warning Coordination Meteorologist Glenn Field was prepared to state the importance of Amateur Radio, when Salvation Army Colonel Fred Van Brunt was called upon. Van Brunt remarked about his organization's quest to improve its communications capabilities and how Amateur Radio has aided his organization. "The ham radio situation helps a great deal," he stated.

"I have already written and submitted a letter to the Governor's Office," wrote Eastern MA Section Emergency Coordinator Rob Macedo, KD1CY. "I have also written an email to Natalie Jacobson."

ARRL Section Manager Mike Neilsen, W1MPN, sent a section-wide email to all Eastern MA ARRL members describing the incident along with actions he and his staff were taking to mitigate the situation.

"[Romney's] attitude about us sets an unfortunate tone within the state's executive branch," wrote Neilsen. "As a former military officer, I see this as a failure in leadership. My immediate concern is our working relationship within the [Massachusetts Emergency Management Team] environment." Neilsen intended to address the Governor's comments as "an urgent matter" at a meeting on November 17 with Don Carlton from the Emergency Management Agency.

"I was very disturbed about what the Governor stated on the program," wrote Ron Wood, W1PLW, the section's Public Information Coordinator. "It does show that more work is needed by all hams in the section. It's a great idea to write letters explaining the good we do." Wood is attempting to schedule a meeting with the Governor's office so that EMA ARRL staffers might discuss the matter further.

Tom Kinahan, N1CPE wrote that Governor Romney's comment has made "a PR problem" for Kinahan in his role as MA State RACES Officer.

"I've got a roster of over 150 Amateur Radio operators that support local communities, and those of us that directly support the state government. There are at least double that in terms of people that are actually out there that I don't have formal paperwork on that support Amateur Radio emergency communications in some organized manner... The Governor has said that he 'certainly doesn't need to rely on ham radio' -- where does that leave the RACES program now?"

Thanks for all the input. The inquiry was posed mostly to determine the accuracy of the statement as I did not think it was much at all correct. The premise seemed to be that since the newer radios were 40 channel, 23 channels would not be type accepted for sale anymore. I was thinking this would mean they all had to be 40 channel. If that were the case what about walkie talkies for CB? Wouldn't they have to be 40 channel as well then if over 100 milliwatts? Although I don't know for sure, I thought that there are still walkie talkies that had only a handfull of channels.
Buying an old 23 channel CB would be either for collectors or just for nostalga of owning one that you thought was really cool back then but wasn't affordable like a Tram Titan 2 or a Browning rig or a Courier Royale. They were very well built radios but expensive when I was on back in the late 60's. The ham gear that was run by a very few back then were Viking Valiants, Heathkit DX-100's and National NC-300 receivers. The Yaesu Ft-101 series became very popular as they came out since you only had to clip the wire to enable the CB band. It was interesting that there was a cutout in the chassis to easily access the wire which ran right across it! I had a lot of fun on Cb but outgrew it in a couple years. I have been a ham since 1970. I am in support of all CB ops who want to become hams unlike many others. Soon the code will be dropped and it will be easy to get a license. GOOD! The more hams the better! I would love to see a day when even though 10 meters is dead for skip conditions there are a bunch of hams on 10 talking anyway. If ya want to, hop on board! This is one 20wpm extra class, took the tests in the FCC office, OM that IS supportive.

You see, news readers, we are seeing that K1MAN and supporter consider deceit and libel funny. I say that both are qualities disqualifying individuals from being ham radio operators.

Rich Whiten is already ex-WB2OTK; Glenn Baxter's renewal of K1MAN has been set aside. With one foot on a banana peel and the other in the grave, declaraing deceit legitimate in regulation is Baxter's deathknell.

Typical politico or either party.

Hasn't a clue how the states com systems works, get frustrated by the hard questions, and lashes out when he should has kept quite. Sadly he will in all probability not suffer for his stupidity.

He ought to be ran out of office on a rail.

This attitude is why I no longer participate in ARES, SkyWarn or any other activity that has ANY government connection.

PICON be damned.

I have spent enough nights looking for tornados, enough weekends trying to "interface" with various government agencies to deliver messages during floods, and enough cold days running MDs and nurses around when the snow/ice shuts the town down.

Somewhere I have a link to a professional design magazine that details the only comm links to work for 3 or 4 weeks after Katrina were the ham's.

The NG, FEMA and Corp of Engineers were reduced to using runners to move messages.

I will dig out the link and post it in the next several days.

A few months ago, NBC's Tonight Show staged a race between a pair of ham-radio operators with Morse-code keys and a couple of kids with text-messaging cellphones to see who could communicate faster. The hams won hands down, proving, in the minds of some, that old technology could hold its own against new. In recent days, ham radio was put to the test again by Hurricane Katrina. This time, however, lives were at stake.

In the world of design engineers and electronics in general, change is essential. Designers work diligently to make the fruits of their labors obsolete almost before they see daylight. The turnover in technology is sometimes like a flood, with old being washed away by new over and over. Often, the new beats the heck out of the old. But there are times when old isn't necessarily bad; in fact, sometimes old works when new doesn't. And then we're glad that old is still around, or at least we should be.

Wireless technology, while relatively new to many consumers, is of course not new at all. A few (very) old-timers remember the original "wireless" of radio. The revolution wrought by the pioneers of wireless changed the world then, and the technology behind that revolution has been re-invented and re-applied time and again. Its pre-eminent incarnation today is our near-ubiquitous wireless communications infrastructure, which has freed us from the shackles of landlines and made our mobile lifestyles possible. Technology truly is great stuff.

Until, of course, a monster hurricane comes along to render it nearly useless. Here we see a scenario in which a flood literally swept away the new. As Hurricane Katrina's fury hammered the Gulf states on August 29, the communications infrastructure took a devastating hit. Telephone service, including wireless, became at first intermittent and then unusable in many localities. Where there was phone service, 911 switchboards were often unreachable due to the massive volume of calls. The response of local authorities, now termed "confused" by deposed FEMA chief Michael Brown, wasn't helping much. The Gulf Coast was about to descend into darkness, chaos, and, worst of all for many, silence.

But proponents of the old were at the ready. The "old," in this case, is ham radio. In the eyes of the "man on the street," ham radio has a pretty stodgy reputation. Aren't hams still using Morse code? Don't some of them use radios with tubes, for goodness sake? What the "man in the street" probably doesn't know is that it was amateurs who advanced the radio arts early in the 20th century. Down through the decades, amateurs have embraced (and often driven) all of the innovations in wireless technology, up to and including all digital modes and the Internet. But many have stayed in touch with their roots, which is good old-fashioned analog HF operation. And while amateurs have a longstanding tradition as innovators and experimenters, they also have a mandate that comes with their licenses: to be ready, willing, and able to provide emergency communications whenever and wherever they're needed.

As Katrina bore down on the Gulf region, amateur radio operators, under the aegis of the American Radio Relay League's (ARRL's) Amateur Radio Emergency Service (ARES), prepared to swing into action with emergency networks that would run health-and-welfare traffic into and out of the disaster zone. As early as the Monday following the storm, hams throughout the hurricane zone were putting emergency stations on the air. In one instance, hams were instrumental in the rescue of 15 people clinging for life to a New Orleans rooftop. Meanwhile, in Alabama, amateur SKYWARN weather nets kept the National Weather Service apprised of conditions throughout the state. In hard-hit sections of Mississippi, hams running off generators and with makeshift antennas were the only means of communication, getting word to out-of-state friends and relatives concerning their loved ones.

There were numerous other instances of hams helping those who were not simply inconvenienced by the storm, but whose lives were in imminent danger. Now that things have calmed down in the Gulf region, many of the emergency nets have stood down. But hams continue to serve the public in the many areas that are still without power or phone service.

As our nation collects itself in the aftermath of the Katrina disaster, President Bush has promised federal reviews of what went right and what went wrong. One of the findings of those inquiries should be that the federally-instituted Amateur Radio Service, which functions under the licensing authority of the FCC, stood tall when the country needed it.

Amateur radio currently faces various threats to its existence. Chief among those is the advent of broadband-over-powerline (BPL) technology, which, if broadly adopted, has the potential to cause widespread interference to HF communications, not just for amateurs but for other services that use the HF spectrum.

Amateurs and the ARRL have made a lot of noise about BPL, asserting that it could seriously hamper their efforts and those of relief agencies such as the Red Cross and Salvation Army, in the event of a disaster such as Katrina. It's rumored, though, that the same FCC commissioners who have given their blessing to BPL field trials will now take a much harder look at the technical issues concerning BPL and its interference potential in the HF spectrum. Let's face it: The federal government didn't handle the emergency in the Gulf very well; it'd be prudent for it not to sanction a technology that could impede one of the few things that actually worked.

Many readers of this newsletter are amateur radio enthusiasts. If you are, and if you haven't already done so, consider writing your congressman to express your concern about the future of the Amateur Radio Service, especially in light of its outstanding efforts in recent days. Remind your elected representatives that a vibrant and unimpeded Amateur service can and will be a lifesaver when disaster strikes. Also, consider how you yourself might help. What if a hurricane, tornado, or earthquake ravages your area? Are you prepared to get on the air without relying on the mains to handle emergency traffic? Get in touch with your local amateur-radio club and find out how you can pitch in.

Your cell phones and wireless routers are indeed great stuff, but so is a good old HF transceiver. We shouldn't always be in such a hurry to let the flood of new technology wash away the old. The geek down the block with all the antennas on his property could turn out to be your best friend someday. Because sometimes, old trumps new.

Greetings! I have this radio model number 630 as well and it is one I would not let go. The VHF is just so so as per most of the multi mode radios. The AM is really pretty decent and what I play with a lot. What is strange is that mine is the same model number as yours, #630, but mine does not have the CB band on it. Mine has marine band in it's place. It is pretty good on that band as well with a long wire attached. Mine is serial # 3206 which I believe to be an earlier version than the G number of yours. The direction finder works well and is something of a curiosity to most people who see it. Other than the CB band mine also displays under the 630/ RDF then Ray Jefferson, Philladelphia, Penna.
A neat old radio for you who collect something a little different. I was fortunate enough to get mine for just the shipping from a guy on one of the news groups.
I wish I had the manual for mine, but alas that did not come with it. I just like to have manuals to go with all my radios. Just thought I would mention this to any bidders. Have a great weekend! Jon.

*Yes, most call centres are scaled down to just be useful in normal situations due to trying to compete on a budget. As in most thing these days its money over everything else. The services always seem to come second. Especially in the National Health Center here in Blighty.

*My arguement also for the continued usefulness of CB radio. Not a replacement for the mobile phone or internet but another communications option especially if the s_it hits the fan. Phones and the internet cant do what the CB does, and vice versa so why not embrace the three. Amateur doesnt need embracing as its there and its not for the general public. It use just needs accepting by the authorities a bit more even though its been proved time and time again.

2307. In Austria Amateurs protest against DSL over powerlines.

Sending DLS (Internet) over powerlines uses either 1.8 to 32 MHz
or 3 to 21 Mhz.
Of cause in the first case CB is also affected.

The signal strength was measured by the gov, and found to be 111.639 times the allowed limit....
They had to reduce it a factor 111.639 to make even digital radio reception (DRM (Digital Radio Mondial)) possible.

New tests are running, here is an original article in German:
http://www.heise.de/newsticker/meldung/66673

As internet over powerlines is also considered in the US, I think US amateurs and CB people should strongly protest too.

These guys got the license to operate 'because it is cable, and that is not regulated like radio'.
Of cause powerlines are not shielded, and high up there, the perfect VERY long antennas....

;-) Maybe if the conditions are good you will be able to get free internet from Austria in the US. ;-)

Actually, any Boy Scout can read code. Hams have their own jargon, for efficiency, but one need not be a fully licensed ham to read a code message. One only need be informed. That can be anybody.

While that may seem to be true, the chaos on the 11 meter band is evidence of just how unworkable 11 meters would be in an emergency. Yes, it would work, and yes, anyone would be able to use it. However, the advantage hams have in an emergency is the discipline and understanding of protocols to be able to get a message through crowded bands, without creating any new interference. Most untrained operators, not all, but most by far, would simply get on the radio and start talking regardless of who is there first. This, coupled with CB's limited local range would be more of an impediment than trained hams working limited allocations in fewer numbers. In an emergency, the 11 meter band may simply not be sufficiently open to make CB a practical alternative to the amateur service.

Amateur operators would have a power advantage, as well, exceeding 200 times the CB user's power output.

Non hams do not understand the long standing traditions of the amateur net--a group, or network of hams working together to get messages from any part of the world to any other part of the world, either acting as phone relay stations or as traffic handlers relaying content. Those networks have existed since Maxim, and are already in place. They exist from coast to coast on all bands. CB does not have such a tradition. Primarily because long distance communication, by the rules of the charter of the service prohibit long distance. But realistically, CB operators are simply not organized into networks ready and willing to move traffic. Most REACT teams are as unable to get a message through a crowded band as any other operator. 5 watts when untrained users are screaming for assistance all at once is not sufficient to overcome the noise.

Further, ham operators are uniquely able, and qualified to improvise communications where non exist. There are bands throughout the spectra with propagation characteristics unique to needs of the moment. Hams know where and when these characteristics are available. CB users do not. Ham operators are legally permitted to improvise equipment, as well, often cobbling together equipment of many types, modifying as they go, to create the combination of hardware necessary to their needs. All they have to do is operate within the bands, and refrain from creating interference. Short of that, only the individual's technical limitations are a factor. CB users, however, frequently don't have the technical expertise to improvise. Even if they did, such improvisation on the 11 meter band is prohibited. Only type accepted hardware is permitted, and it may not be modified by the end user. Few CB operators are licensed to service their own radios. In an emergency, they'd be limited by the functionality and serviceability of the hardware at hand. Ham radio operators, on the other hand, would have no limitations except that they must operate within the bands, and the emissions must not create interference.

So, while it may seem true that CB is open to everyone and a far better option that a licensed service, reality begs to differ.

What's unfortunate, is that the CB mentality has begun to affect the amateur service, as well. The sense of community and public service has been eroded by those who don't know, nor do they care, about the public service aspect of amateur radio. And the responsibilities of being a part of the service.

Emergency generators in private hands are still considered a rarity by most. Not the case. I live in Suburban Chicago. Half of my neighbors have generators. I have a 20,000 watt generator that I can kick in when the power goes down--a trick I learned from my grandfather. Hams who participated in DXpeditions, or field days often have generators to power their rigs. As a second tier backup, I"ve got a 1000 watt inverter that I can power with the battery on my car. With the heavy duty three phase alternator I installed, I can keep that battery alive simply by starting the car and letting it run for an hour or two every so often.

If one wants to, there are always methods of being prepared for power outtage.

As for who they're talking to? Other hams. There are a lot of them out there. And many in any given community.

Exactly my point. Broadcast is not the goal. Point to point communication is. And that's where hams excel. Because they know how to work together, not only to limit interference, but to move traffic.
They're organized. They're disciplined. They don't broadcast to the masses. They have a plan, and it's already in place. You are but one with a radio and an intent. So are hundreds of others in your region.
None of you have gotten together to create a strategy to handle communications in an emergency. Chaos threatens.

A good analogy is the a football stadium. Organized individuals could move a message around the stadium during a game. While those 'ready to broadcast to the masses,' would simply begin calling out to whoever hears them. As they do when the ball nears the goal.
Organization would get an intelligible message through the noise. While the unorganized would BE the noise.

Your trying to tell me all boyscouts know morse code?? are you sure?? so youd keep boy scouts in these troubled areas would you... Only a few people can understand morse.

One sec. You are also simply going on about civilians... where do the police come into it? Their radios are knocked out and they need communications.
They cant use amateur bands because they arent licenced.... they can use CB's though cant they?

I dont think you understood what i meant. I didnt mean use CB instead of Amateur. I cant see why the both cant be used side by side.

Dont forget were talking about local'ish communications here not wide ranging communication. The information only needs to be put out to somewhere with power and unaffected. Also power wise theres a good few set ups on the CB band out there with plenty of power. You go on about legally but were talking natural disaster times here and i doubt if everyone sits reading rule books to see what they can do.

Like i said, side by side not instead of. Dont forget a lot of these screaming untrained users wont be able to use their sets due to homebase power cuts and in NO case, flooded vehicals but it wouldnt take long to organise some sort of communication set up via CB in these instances. It only needs a few experienced CB operators to make it viable. There are some clever organised CB groups out there which you overlook just as the politician chappie in charge tried to brush off radio Amateurs... we dont need their help... remember? Your doing exactly the same thing. The more communications channels in an emergancy the better.

You dont need adapted hardware. Were talking local communications here not trying to get out round the world. The CB service is perfectly adiquate for this.

Pedantic reply there. You knew perfectly well what i meant which was to get information about and communicate to those in range (remember the repeaters being knocked out)

And that's where hams excel. Because they know how to Bollocks........ only the Hams who have been trained for such events have plans in place

You are but one > with a radio and an intent. So are hundreds of others in your region.

Internet wouldnt be an issue... knocked out remember. As will have most of the incapable users of CB. Only the ones prepaired "with a plan" would be on air ready to organise. Or do you think anyone who isnt an Amateur couldnt organise anything. I know a few Amateurs who couldnt organise their breakfasts in the mornings never mind anything else.

Trumpet blowing for ones own service and nothing else. As far as perfect Hams go, you seem to think they are all angels and well organised. Well unless they have been recruited and actually trained for such events then they would be as useless as the next person. Not all Hams are as you imply.

You also seem to repeatedly go on about one or the other service. Like i said earlier and was not picked up on as your own trumpet was deafening you, both services could have run side by side perfectly fine. CB for the general organising of local issues and policing and Amateur for the longer distance more drafting in supplies side of things and keeping outsiders informed....

Regards,
Graham.

Thank you James for your advice. My Associations Covenants and By Laws were written back in 1993. I do not know for sure but I do beleive that they have not been amended since. If I am right, and Ill have to check on this to be sure, if there was no amendment to the Covenants and By Laws as a result of the Communications Act Of 1996, then is it safe to say that I am covered under this Act?

One of my trucks has an old 23 channel radio in it. I think it sounds better than some of the new "junk" out there. All my radios are stuck on channel 19, so why would I want a 40 channel radio?

My feeling is that it isn't going to do much good to cry... the FCC and majority of the public seem to like it... and the Hams and CBers have a lousy lobby. Let's hope the levels are low enough to be tolerable.

The mayor was only confirming what many of us in this hobby realize:
Ham radio operators have not served any useful purpose in emergency communications for a long time. The professionals pretty much ignore them. At most they talk to one-another in health and welfare nets and if someone actually calls in with an emergency all hell breaks loose because everyone wants to talk personally with the ham calling in.

Hams have this vision of themselves as the emergency communicators who while huddled in a dark storm beaten shack will get through to the outside world and save the day by using a car battery and some jury-rigged cw setup. And the hams on the outside see themselves as the unique link on the other end who will alert the authorities and direct them to the site before anyone else can because they alone have a connection with the emergency site. It's little more than mental masturbation folks 'cause the real world doesn't work that way.

Hello All:

I wonder what pissed off the Governor on Amateur Radio?

Mitt Romney is a Republican. IIRC, he moved to Massachusetts from Utah around the time of the last Winter Olympics, didn't he? MA has a habit of electing Republican governors. Sounds unlikely, but you can look it up.

You probably don't, until someone you want to listen to goes above ch 23. As far as junk out there goes you don't have to buy new to get a 40ch. They have been around since 1977 so there's plenty of good units to choose from.

have you ever talked to a ham? There is a reason behind the "hat" (antenna). And the call sign well it identifies who we are.... we are not queer, just a bit of an unusual breed.
Ham radio is fun and you get to meet some interesting characters on the air waves. give it a try one of these times it isn't that hard to study for the license.

Amateur radio is only as helpful as the people in it, but there are PLENTY

the hams on scene in New Orleans LOANED HF equipment to the National Guard

All I see here is a high shade of envy and sour grapes towards hams who

Nice try, however:

As usual, ham radio operators help sustain wide-ranging relief efforts
By Andrea Kelly
ARIZONA DAILY STAR

When all else fails, it's ham radio to the rescue. Across Arizona, ham radio operators are helping sustain Hurricane Katrina relief efforts by helping storm-torn communities communicate with rescue workers and family across the country.

This is not a first. Ham radio operators come out of the woodwork during disasters around the world, even transmitting in Morse code if language barriers pop up, said Mike Swiader, president of the amateur Superstition Radio Club in Mesa.

Ham radio operators have contributed to emergency communication efforts since World War II, Swiader said, and were crucial in post-9/11 emergency communications, as well as during the Asian tsunami last holiday season.

Ham radios work when other communication systems are down because they're powered by solar energy, batteries or generators rather than the usual power sources.

The messages are passed from radio to radio until they get to the one they are directed to, so radios don't need to be near each other to receive signals, like regular AM/FM radio signals.

"We've been involved in passing traffic to and from the Louisiana and Mississippi area," said Tom Fagan, a leader of the Arizona ham radio operators organization. "Whatever needs to come in and go out, we're doing."

When Arizona's ham operators - there are about 16,000 of them - get messages from the hurricane area, they send them along to agencies like the American Red Cross and the Salvation Army in the Southeastern region of the country.

"We're the link," Fagan said.

Because communications within a disaster area are often jumbled, Swiader said, it's frequently easier for someone there to contact an operator in someplace like Arizona, who can then relay the message back to a recipient in the disaster area.

"Sometimes it's easier to be heard that way," he said.

More than 30 ham radio operators from Arizona have already headed toward the disaster area, hoping to assist relief efforts and give emergency workers a way to communicate with each other, as well as assisting searches for missing persons.

"They're moving in when they're allowed by American Red Cross and Salvation Army," said Ned Stearns, a Phoenix ham operator and vice director of the American Radio Relay League, the national organization for ham operators.

In fact, the ham operators plan to compile a list of people they can determine as missing, deceased, alive or unknown, based on information transmitted over the ham signals.

To find out about people in the area, visit www.satern.org and fill out the health and welfare information request for the person you are trying to find. This information will be sent through the Salvation Army emergency radio network.

Ham radio operators are helping from afar
Sunday, September 11, 2005
By DONNA FORK
For the Times dfork@knology.net

But sometimes, even the airwaves can be shut down

They also serve who listen and wait.

Huntsville amateur radio operator Douglas Hilton and other "hams" in North Alabama are helping victims of Hurricane Katrina by relaying messages between families, officials and each other.

Lately, Hilton's been spending most of his spare time in his "ham shack" listening to calls for assistance. The systems analyst for Intergraph Corp. is one of thousands of amateur radio operators who help people during emergencies.

Hilton is unusual in the ham radio world because he wears three hats: He is an amateur operator; a member of the Alabama State Defense Force, heading the Communications Platoon for North Alabama; and he's also a military communicator authorized to use the Military Affiliate Radio System.

His connection to the military (although he is a civilian) gives him access to additional radio frequencies most amateurs can't access. He has been a ham radio operator for 42 years; his father had him build a crystal radio when he was 7 years old, and he got his ham license as a teenager. But he wasn't all that active until after the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001.

"That hit me right between the eyes," he recalled, and he began to get back into "hamming."

Now Hilton averages about 100 hours a month on the airwaves and takes countless courses and certifications. He noted that amateur radio operators are "amateurs only in that we're not paid." In return for service "the government gives us frequencies."

Hilton said the North Alabama ham community is large.

"The astronauts are all ham radio operators," he said, noting that astronaut Owen Garriott "was the first ham in space."

Hilton''s "ham shack" is not really a shack at all. It is located in a formal dining room - complete with crystal chandelier. It includes six radios and two computers.

"You don't need six, but don't tell my wife, please," Hilton said as his wife, Diane, laughed. She recently obtained her "technician class" license, which is the entry-level license for ham radio operators. The next is "general class." The highest, which Hilton has, is "amateur extra." Anyone can be an amateur radio operator, Hilton said. There is no age limit: Hilton knows a local ham who is 18 and another who is 89.

It doesn't cost much to be an operator either, he said. A beginner could purchase enough equipment to get started for about $300. Courses are free through one of the local ham radio clubs, of which there are several, including the Huntsville Amateur Radio Club (the Web address is www.harc.net).

In addition to six radios, Hilton has two computers: a laptop and a desktop. "The radios are hooked into the computer." With his setup, the Hiltons can talk to other hams as far away as Japan.

But for the past two weeks there hasn't been time to chat about matters such as which antennas they like the best. There are emergency frequencies to monitor. At the moment, a critical one is the Salvation Army's emergency frequency, Hilton said.

Hilton never knows if it will be a busy night or a quiet one. Recent solar flares have added to the uncertainty because they disrupt communications. Friday, during the late afternoon and early evening, it was unusually quiet.

"I'm a little surprised," he said Friday. "I can't believe how dead these bands are."

Solar flare

It could be a solar flare, or could be something else. "That's the problem, you never know," he said. The waiting, the listening, "it wears you out." But it's worth it when you hear a voice and "you might be the only person who can hear this guy."

On Thursday night, when Hilton was expecting problems, reception was fine. He was able to contact two operators in Louisiana. He also heard one Mississippi ham talking to another ham "so at least one is working there."

ecause of the Hurricane Katrina disaster, there are thousands of messages piling up, waiting to be delivered by ham radio operators: What will happen when all their radios start working again?

People like Hilton will be extremely busy. There are thousands of ham radio operators in Louisiana and Mississippi. When they all get back to the airwaves, it will be quite a challenge to sort out all the messages.

But meanwhile, as they waited for the deluge of messages, on Thursday night the Huntsvillians received a call for help from New Mexico.

Maura Campbell Kingston of Clovis, N.M., was trying to reach her aunt, 76-year-old Sister Joan Campbell, a nun, of Harvey, La. Kingston called the Salvation Army, which contacted a ham radio operator, who called Hilton.

Hilton tried Thursday to reach a radio operator in Louisiana to check on Campbell, but almost all of them were off the air. Finally on Friday night Hilton got through to "KG5YK," who is Robert A. Turner of Elm Grove, La.

When Turner's message came through, hams from all over the United States could be heard, eager to talk with him.

Helping 'ham brother'

The outpouring of sympathy could not be contained: Radio operators from Texas, Indiana and elsewhere all expressed their support for their "ham brother" in Louisiana.

"I hope this never happens again," said Turner of the Katrina disaster. "It's been a tough time. ... I'm looking for the right words." He thanked the other hams for their all their help.

"You'd do the same for us," the ham from Texas said. Others echoed his sentiments.

Turner gave Hilton information about when to call with his "health and welfare message" about Kingston's aunt. Hilton vowed to keep trying to deliver the message "for as long as it takes."

But that proved to be unnecessary.

Friday night, after calling her aunt repeatedly, Kingston finally reached her by phone. She was still at her home in Harvey.

"She was OK," Kingston said in a telephone interview Saturday. "Harvey stayed dry." But the area was without power and Campbell "was sitting in the dark with her flashlight."

Later, Kingston called Hilton to thank him. She said he told her: "I'm just doing it because I want to help."

Kingston was impressed.

"I believe that thing about Southern hospitality."

Ham radio proves to be more than a hobby
By Jeannetta Edwards

Daily Times Leader

When Hurricane Katrina hit, telephone and cell phone communication hit an impasse because of downed lines and towers. But, amateur radio operators did not miss a beat or a transmission.

"Before and after the hurricane, this has proven to be the most reliable form of communication," said Randall O'Brien, a retired highway patrolman who has been involved with ham radio operation for 35 years.

"People thought when they got cell phones, they didn't need us anymore," said O'Brien, an advanced licensed operator, who often talks to missionaries in South and Central America.

According to Denver Baker, Clay County has more than 30 amateur radio operators, but only a small fraction are active.

"It's a wonderful hobby," said Baker, whose wife recently received her technician license.

The multi-faceted operation includes digital and satellite communication and is enjoyed by all age levels.

"This is a good hobby for seniors or for young people," said Baker.

By becoming a ham radio operator, which requires taking a test to obtain a license, people can communicate with others anywhere in the world.

"The classes for the test are free," said Baker, "and we help you with everything you need to know."

According to Baker, who has been enjoying this hobby for the last 10 years, the only investment required is the fee for the test and the purchase of equipment. A handheld transmitter cost around $100.

The self-policing group ensures that everyone adheres to the rules and regulations.

"We're called amateur radio operators, but there's nothing amateur about it," said O'Brien, who first became interested in electronic at age 13.

The group, which also belongs to the American Radio Relay League, meets monthly in West Point.

"We have a good bunch of hams in this area," said Baker. "We bring food at our meetings and have a good time."

"It's nice, especially for seniors," said Baker.

For information on getting involved in ham radio operation, call O'Brien at 494-2898 or Baker at 494-9096.

Since Hurricane Katrina hit New Orleans last week, several ears in the East Mountains and Estancia Valley have been tuned to amateur short-wave radios.
McIntosh resident Ed Brooks said local Ham radio operators are willing to relay messages from the Gulf Coast if needed.
"We guys here in the Estancia Valley are just listening," he said. "We haven't had any need for what we can offer."
Although they may not be needed yet, Brooks said local Ham radio operators are still listening in to conversations taking place in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama.
During the interview with Brooks, his Ham radio was tuned to a conversation involving a Coast Guard helicopter that was rescuing a family from a rooftop in New Orleans with direction from another Ham radio operator.
Brooks said similar situations have been broadcast hundreds of times during the past week.
"It's been really spotty, but what we've been (hearing) is that it was good fortune that somebody down there had Ham equipment," he said.
Daryl Clutter, an Edgewood Ham operator and member of the Salvation Army's shortwave network, said he relayed a message from Ontario to U.S. Coast Guard officials in Washington, D.C., that originated in Louisiana.
"It was just the word 'help' spelled out two times," he said.
Like Brooks, Clutter said he has stayed close to his Ham radio since Aug. 29.
"There's been so much going on," he said. "Every day, something happens."
Clutter, a former truck driver who often delivered frozen food to the Gulf Coast, said radio traffic has slowed since the hurricane devastated the region.
"You just wonder who all you know, that used to be your customers down there, that are still alive or had the good sense to get out," he said.
As amateur radio operators, Clutter said, Ham enthusiasts practice for disasters "every day."
"There's only so many cell phone frequencies," he explained. "If the phone system goes down, there's no way ... (one company) could handle all the 60,000 or 70,000 phone calls."

Mountainair resident and Ham operator Bob Scupp said the Salvation Army network alone has handled more than 128,000 messages since Aug. 29.
Brooks said Ham operators have been relaying messages from residents to volunteers or emergency personnel. Since a large number of National Guard and military personnel have arrived in the area, Brooks said the messages have changed from pleas for help to questions about well-being.
Shelters for evacuees are beginning to utilize Ham radios to communicate with other shelters to help families find missing relatives, Brooks said.
Rescues are still going on.
"There's been instances where they're still finding people, trapped in houses, trapped in buildings or running out of oxygen," said Clutter. "It's just terrible what's going on down there."
Clutter and Brooks said they will not offer assistance unless someone requests contact in the Albuquerque area.
"We don't want to tie up the frequencies," Brooks said.
Clutter and Brooks said they will continue to listen to their Ham radios for messages or relay requests until communications are restored in the Gulf Coast.
"We live and breathe this," Clutter said.

Amateur radio operators provide vital communications support
By Teresa Atkerson
MCALESTER NEWS-CAPITAL (MCALESTER, Okla.)
MCALESTER, Okla. -

With more than 10,000 requests for help in finding loved ones, the amateur radio operators in Louisiana are extremely busy.

In fact, they are so busy, they have asked people to wait with their requests unless there is an extreme emergency.

Ralph Suter, with the Pittsburg County Amateur Radio Club, said they had about a half dozen requests for assistance in locating loved ones in the area devastated by Hurricane Katrina. ï¿½The Red Cross funneled the requests for health and welfare,ï¿½ he explained. Now, the national traffic system is backed up with the requests, he said, because there were so many.

There are extreme problems with communications in New Orleans at the present time. Suter explained VHF radio has to have line of sight while amateur radio operators can use lower frequencies that can bounce off or curve to get the message through. ï¿½A benefit of amateur radio is you can throw a piece of wire in a tree or up a flagpole. With 12 volts of power, you can operate on a local or even worldwide basis,ï¿½ he explained.

As an example, Suter said recently an amateur radio operator in Louisiana had some kind of problem that he couldnï¿½t get help with after the hurricane. He put out the message, it went through Washington state to Texas and then into Louisiana where the right people were found to help him.

Amateur radio operators can also communicate via Morse Code, upload through television or computer or radio to satellite, Suter said. That gives them even more advantages in communication.

Jim Russell, president of the PCARC, said amateur radio has been around as long as there has been radio. Even in World War I, amateur radio operators helped with messages in Morse Code, which is something operators today still must learn as part of their licensing process.

ï¿½We look at it as a hobby,ï¿½ Suter said. ï¿½Itï¿½s a resource of individuals because they have an interest to develop the skills to operate radios in various modes.

ï¿½Itï¿½s a resource for trained communicators.ï¿½

There are forms that must be used when transmitting messages. ï¿½When it goes into the system at one point and comes out at the destination, it is exactly the same information, even with the misspelled words,ï¿½ Suter said. ï¿½Itï¿½s our responsibility when handling traffic that it comes out exactly as it comes in.ï¿½

Suter said many of the operators use their radios on a daily basis while others check weekly. When it comes to disasters, there is the Amateur Radio Emergency Service. ï¿½Itï¿½s not really an organization but it is organized on a national basis for community programs.

John Wright, another PCARC member, checks with the Oklahoma Sooner Net and with the Salvation Armyï¿½s network, SATERN.

After the Oklahoma City bombing in 1995 and 9/11, Russell said amateur radio was used extensively. It is also used during and after tornadoes and other natural disasters. Now, the group can work with the Automatic Position Reporting System to help more accurately report severe weather.

The group has an annual field day, which is a combination of a exercise and a contest. ï¿½We go out and set up radios under adverse conditions to simulate disaster response,ï¿½ Suter said. ï¿½In the past, weï¿½ve started with solar power, using a battery in a car or even a portable generator.

ï¿½The last time I kept count, we were able to make contacts in 47 states, the Philippines, some in South America and Puerto Rico in a 24-hour period.ï¿½

Suter pointed out that the word ï¿½amateurï¿½ is not what people interpret it as. ï¿½People interpret it to be an unprofessional group. But while itï¿½s made up of a lot of people for a hobby, itï¿½s not unorganized or unprofessional when dealing with disaster. We have capabilities that public agencies just donï¿½t have,ï¿½ he said.

Members also have to be licensed. The license testing can be done in McAlester now so those wishing to be licensed donï¿½t have to go to Dallas or Oklahoma City as in the past.

Old Technology Still Needed

Overwhelming Charity

Joe Carcia, station manager of the American Radio Relay League in Newington, Conn. helps with the disaster relief effort for Hurricane Katrina's victims along the Gulf Coast. (AP)

If anything, Katrina has taught us the value of redundancy. The best way to make sure that messages get through is to have standby systems that can take over when others fail.

(CBS) There is a store in London dedicated to "appropriate technology." It mostly carries products designed to be used in developing countries where there is a weak communications infrastructure.

Sadly, thatï¿½s now the case for a large swath of the United States where Hurricane Katrina and its flood waters have wiped out cell phone towers, telephone switching stations, Internet routers and other ground-based communications systems. Even wireless Internet depends on nearby transmitters and receivers on the ground.

But amateur radio is working and, according to Allen Pitts of the Amateur Radio Relay League (ARRL), "ham" radio operators from throughout the country are answering the call to provide vital communications links. Satellite phones, a much newer technology, are also coming to the rescue.

Pitts acknowledges that cell phones and other technologies "work wonderfully when everything is going right," but "they are very vulnerable when everything is going wrong."

Just as with past hurricanes, earthquakes and on September 11th, the ground-based infrastructure, in many cases failed because vital parts of the system were damaged or overwhelmed during the emergency.

In other words, when you need them most, those cell phones are of no value.

Amateur radio, says Pitts, is not vulnerable to these problems "because each of the radio operators is a complete transmit and reception center unto themselves able to continue going and continue with nothing more than an electrical source, such as a battery or a generator, a radio and piece of wire for an antenna."

Listen to audio of Larry Magid's interview with ARRL's Allen Pitts.

While base-station radios are larger and require an electrical power source, there are also portable ham radios slightly larger than a pack of cigarettes with a range of about 20 miles, according to Pitts. Pitts says that the next sized radio, about the size of a paperback book, can communicate up to about 50 miles without a repeater while larger systems, "about the size of a desktop computer" can communicate globally.

Amateur radio operators are in demand. When I checked the ARRLï¿½s Web site there was a call from the Salvation Army for "10, two-operator Amateur Radio teams for deployment in the U.S. Gulf Coast. Operators must hold at least a General class license. Teams should be fully self sufficient in terms of food, water and lodging and plan to remain in the disaster area for from one to two weeks."

Pitts said there was a "lady in Connecticut," who was listening on her amateur radio and happened to hear that there was a woman "who was trapped for four days without food and water." She was able to relay that message, by ham radio, into an operations center that dispatched the fire department. A day later she got a call from the trapped womanï¿½s mother, thanking her for her role in the rescue.

Ironically, this comes at a time when amateur radio is struggling for respect and, to some extent, survival. What was once a popular hobby has fallen into somewhat hard times for a variety of reasons, including the fact that the Internet, cheap long distance calling, cell phones and other technologies make the ability to use these two-way radios not quite as compelling as it once was.

Also, there is a bit of a rift between some members of the amateur radio community and some parts of the Internet industry over the use of power lines to transmit Internet signals. This technology, which could put power companies into competition with cable and phone companies for broadband service, has been criticized by some ham operators because of possible interference problems.

Despite the fact that their origins go back to the early 20th century, hams are hardly low-tech. There are now bridges between ham operators and other technologies including the Internet, cellular phone systems and Internet phones. In fact, long before the Internet became popular, ham operators were using their radio gear to transmit data along with voice and morse code.

Also coming to the rescue are satellite phones. These phones - which are much more expensive to buy and use than cell phones - rely on satellites rather than ground equipment to communicate with the phone network.

Because satellites are in space, theyï¿½re not vulnerable to conditions here on earth. Also, as long as you have a view of the sky, youï¿½re able to communicate. Iridium, which operates "66 low-earth orbiting (LEO), cross-linked satellites and 11 in-orbit spares," says it provides "complete coverage of the earth (including oceans, airways and Polar Regions)."

I carried an Iridium phone with me when I traveled to Peru a few years ago. It worked great when I was in the clear such as on a boat in the middle of the Amazon River but, because it requires a line of site view of the sky, it had problems in dense jungle and in cities with tall buildings.

Iridium spokesperson Liz DeCastro estimates that there are currently about 10,000 of Iridium's phones being used in the region with orders for about 6,000 more. The company sells through resellers so it doesnï¿½t have exact numbers. DeCastro says that "traffic in the region increased by 3,000 percent" since the storm hit and that the number of subscribers increased by 500 percent.

Satellite phones are a lot cheaper to use then when I went to Peru, but they still cost between $1 and $1.25 per minute to use, according to DeCastro. Thatï¿½s a lot more than domestic cell use, though often cheaper than using U.S. phones when roaming overseas. The phones themselves cost between $1,000 and $1,500 she says.

In addition to handling voice calls, satellite phones can also be used for messaging or data, albeit at modem rather than broadband speed.

If anything, Katrina has taught us the value of redundancy. The best way to make sure that messages get through is to have standby systems that can take over when others fail.

Thatï¿½s why some news organizations keep manual typewriters around. You never know when that old technology may suddenly become the "appropriate technology."

Amateur radio operators head to Gulf Coast

September 6, 2005, 1:00 AM EDT

NEWINGTON, Conn. -- Oscar Fuller only became an amateur radio operator about a year ago, but he knows how valuable his equipment can be in an emergency.

So even though he has never responded to a crisis, the American Relay Radio League member is planning to head to the hurricane-ravaged Gulf Coast and see if he can help establish an emergency communication network.

"This is a tragic set of circumstances," said Fuller, who recently retired from IBM. "If I can lend a hand, I want to."

Fuller and about 14 other members of the Newington-based amateur radio operator network have signed up to join the relief efforts for Hurricane Katrina. The amateur operators _ known as hams _ can often use their equipment to communicate in difficult circumstances.

Because the radio equipment operates on many frequencies, is self-contained and portable, it can often work when other communication networks, such as telephones, aren't working. It can never be blocked, which is why operators say it is good in disasters.

"When all else fails, ham radios work," said Betsy Doane of Shelton, who oversees the 2,500 members of the league in Connecticut.

David Patton, an official with the radio group, said as many as 750 volunteers may be needed. The Connecticut volunteers are going to help provide communication support for more than 200 American Red Cross Shelters in Mississippi, Alabama and the Florida panhandle.

"There are limited resources to an overwhelming disaster," said Allen Pitts, public relations manager for the radio league. "So there is not a ham on every corner. The hams are put where they are needed most of all, in emergency traffic or for saving lives."

Dennis Motschenbacher of Colchester was among the first volunteers to say he would go. He spent Sunday shopping for supplies and getting ready for the 18-hour, 1,100 mile drive to Montgomery, Ala., where he will be dispatched to a shelter.

"Everything I need, I'm bringing," he said. "There won't be any Radio Shack to go to."

The 57-year-old has been a ham for more than 40 years. He has operated his radio from places as far as East Timor and the Balkans.

The hardest part will be "seeing people in this troubled state _ smelly, sick, depressed, angry. And no matter what any of us do, it won't be enough for all of them."

Ham Radio Operators Pitch In To Hurricane Katrina Relief Effort General Interest
09/07/2005
With communications out all over New Orleans and the Gulf Coast, the professionals are turning to amateurs to be their ears to what's going on in the areas devastated by Hurricane Katrina.

Local operators say they've been in touch with people in and around New Orleans since the beginning of the ordeal.

Ed McLaughlin, of Kennewick, says in the days that followed the disaster, he was able to help a family in Medford, Ore., get an update on how their relatives were. He's provided similar contact for a family in Chicago.

The reason-- ham radio, which is able to get in places that have no other means for communication when land-based infrastructure fails.

Ham radio has been such a success during these recent days that FEMA and the Red Cross are now using it as their primary mode for communication until other modes of communication are restored.

Ham radio helps close communication gap

If you've been unsuccessfully trying to get information about someone living in Hurricane Katrina's region of havoc, here's an avenue you may not have considered: local ham radio operators.

While cell phones rely on towers and traditional telephones rely on intact land lines, ham radios transmit from radio to radio, bouncing waves off the ionosphere in the upper atmosphere far above the Earth's tantrums. They can run off batteries, generators and sometimes even the sun.

Two Ozarks amateur ham radio groups - the Nixa Amateur Radio Club and the Christian County ARES (Amateur Radio Emergency Services) - have been relaying messages from people all over the world to those whose communication has been cut off by Katrina.

David Beckler, a ham radio operator from Nixa, even relayed a message Tuesday from the director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency in Texas to New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin.

"He had a message from President Bush to the mayor of the city of New Orleans," says Beckler, a New Orleans native who moved to Nixa six years ago.

Since the message was an emergency communication, the dispatch needed to go through the net control station on an emergency frequency, Beckler said. He knew it was important, because the ham operator had said, "break, break, break," which requires all other communications to yield and give that one priority.

"The net control station or other stations on this frequency could not hear this message," Beckler says. Beckler contacted the net control station, and people there asked him to contact the sending ham operator and relay the message back to that operator. "That's when he told me it was from President Bush."

Joe Hargis, another Nixa ham club member, also helped with an urgent message. "I was monitoring the SATERN network (Salvation Army Team Emergency Radio Network)," said Hargis, a retired elementary schoolteacher.

"A person called in with a piece of emergency traffic and the (receiving) person could not hear him. He said, 'Is there anyone on the frequency who can copy this?' I broke in and told him I could hear it fine."

Hargis relayed the message back to SATERN, and the operator there could hear Hargis well. "It was a 90-year-old woman and her elderly neighbors. They were afraid to leave their home because of the unrest in the neighborhood, things that were going on, and they needed assistance to be evacuated. They were running low on medicine, and one was running out of her oxygen supply."

Nixa ham club member Rod Kittleman says their members helped save the lives of a couple in New Orleans.

"A weak, disabled elderly couple were trapped in their attic. Their phone worked, but they couldn't get through to local authorities," the KADI radio program manager explains.

Too weak to break through their roof so emergency personnel could find them, the couple called their daughter in this area. She contacted the Nixa club, which relayed the message to a local ham operator who is licensed to operate on emergency frequencies.

"He got through to authorities in New Orleans over the radio, and they were rescued. (The ham operator) relayed the message back to their daughter. That's the reward we live for."

ARRL's Role In Rescue Offers Lessons For Future

Mark David
ED Online ID #11164
October 13, 2005

Investigations into the communications breakdowns in our national emergency response systems continue. Yet I'm struck by the contrast between the hue and cry for upgraded infrastructure solutions and the much quieter revelation that old-school ham radio provided the only trustworthy communication during Hurricane Katrina.

New Orleans emergency departments' radios were wiped out when broadcast towers lost backup power generators. Police and fire departments only had citizen-band radios, offering inadequate bandwidth. Emergency responders lacked coordinated frequencies.

The National Guard cited antiquated communications technology-as a contributor to its delayed response. Lt. Gen. Steven Blum told USA Today that there was a shortage of high-tech radios and satellite communications gear. "We were underequipped," Blum told USA Today. "We don't need tanks and attack helicopters... but we must have state-of-the-art radios and communications."

The Guard has historically gotten "handmedown" equipment from active-duty military. It now uses "Vietnam-era radios while it needs 37,000 newer radios," according to Guard budget briefings.

Meanwhile, ham radio operators proved that older technology can be the most reliable technology. Our EDA Editor (and ham) David Maliniak wrote an online column on the subject, pointing out that sometimes "old works when new doesn't." (Read it and add your comments at ED Online 11136.) During and after Katrina, hams running on generators (sometimes with makeshift antennas) worked throughout the hurricane zone to put emergency stations on the air. They guided rescuers to stranded victims and updated weather services via the Hurricane Watch Net.

Amateur radio was the primary means of contact with the outside world for many shelters. It's estimated that some 1000 amateur radio volunteers helped serve the hurricane-ravaged communities and shelters, even providing communications for the Red Cross.

Still, the real lesson of the ham radio successes isn't that old sometimes trumps new. Upgraded, reliable hardware is vital for adequate emergency response. Amateur radio has continued to upgrade too. Hams use satellites, digital systems, cross-band repeaters, and more. As the American Radio Relay League (ARRL) puts it, the Morse code key may still be on the desk, but generally it's next to a modern system operable under extreme emergency conditions.

DISTRIBUTED NETWORKS

Katrina taught two key lessons. First, the Amateur Radio Emergency Service (ARES) organization proved effective because hams don't depend on a centralized infrastructure. When cell towers, phone switching centers, or other central communicationsnetworks are down, hams aren't. Many operators have their own generators and are ready to fire them up to get on the air when there's no power. National disaster response plans must assume that the centralized communications infrastructure likely will be crippled, so the emergency system must include a distributed or "mesh" networking scheme.

Second, ARRL succeeded because operators subscribe to a mission that comes with their licenses-to be ready to provide emergency communications whenever and wherever they're needed. ARES has a well-conceived action plan coordinated through the Radio Amateur Civil Emergency Service (RACES). ARES is part of the ARRL, and RACES is coordinated through the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA). But like the broacast system, the emergency plan is decentralized. Radio operators can work independently to serve their community as circumstances require.

A decentralized emergency plan requires deputized people who truly understand and care about their responsibilities. The best emergency response relies on distributed manpower, with first responders empowered to make decisions at the scene of the crisis.

It doesn't take a federal investigation to realize that the government's emergency-response debacle was caused by centralizing the decision-making with politically appointed bureaucrats who didn't have a personal mission or a true sense of ownership in ensuring preparedness. The fiasco with now-deposed FEMA leader Michael Brown exemplifies the folly of appointments based on cronyism, rather than the recruitment of people who have a passion, understanding, and commitment for the responsibilities they shoulder.

In this issue's cover story, Ron Schneiderman looks at government programs and the new technologies tackling our homeland security problems. But will the right people get those technologies? Too often, homeland security appointments and dollars are doled out according to political favoritism. As we saw in the recent emergency response, technologies are only effective when managed by people-like the hams-who take their responsibilities to heart.

Hats off to all of you who care about the quality of the security and emergency communications technologies you're engineering. Let's hope they end up controlled by people who care just as much.

A few months ago, NBC's Tonight Show staged a race between a pair of ham-radio operators with Morse-code keys and a couple of kids with text-messaging cellphones to see who could communicate faster. The hams won hands down, proving, in the minds of some, that old technology could hold its own against new. In recent days, ham radio was put to the test again by Hurricane Katrina. This time, however, lives were at stake.

In the world of design engineers and electronics in general, change is essential. Designers work diligently to make the fruits of their labors obsolete almost before they see daylight. The turnover in technology is sometimes like a flood, with old being washed away by new over and over. Often, the new beats the heck out of the old. But there are times when old isn't necessarily bad; in fact, sometimes old works when new doesn't. And then we're glad that old is still around, or at least we should be.

Wireless technology, while relatively new to many consumers, is of course not new at all. A few (very) old-timers remember the original "wireless" of radio. The revolution wrought by the pioneers of wireless changed the world then, and the technology behind that revolution has been re-invented and re-applied time and again. Its pre-eminent incarnation today is our near-ubiquitous wireless communications infrastructure, which has freed us from the shackles of landlines and made our mobile lifestyles possible. Technology truly is great stuff.

Until, of course, a monster hurricane comes along to render it nearly useless. Here we see a scenario in which a flood literally swept away the new. As Hurricane Katrina's fury hammered the Gulf states on August 29, the communications infrastructure took a devastating hit. Telephone service, including wireless, became at first intermittent and then unusable in many localities. Where there was phone service, 911 switchboards were often unreachable due to the massive volume of calls. The response of local authorities, now termed "confused" by deposed FEMA chief Michael Brown, wasn't helping much. The Gulf Coast was about to descend into darkness, chaos, and, worst of all for many, silence.

But proponents of the old were at the ready. The "old," in this case, is ham radio. In the eyes of the "man on the street," ham radio has a pretty stodgy reputation. Aren't hams still using Morse code? Don't some of them use radios with tubes, for goodness sake? What the "man in the street" probably doesn't know is that it was amateurs who advanced the radio arts early in the 20th century. Down through the decades, amateurs have embraced (and often driven) all of the innovations in wireless technology, up to and including all digital modes and the Internet. But many have stayed in touch with their roots, which is good old-fashioned analog HF operation. And while amateurs have a longstanding tradition as innovators and experimenters, they also have a mandate that comes with their licenses: to be ready, willing, and able to provide emergency communications whenever and wherever they're needed.

As Katrina bore down on the Gulf region, amateur radio operators, under the aegis of the American Radio Relay League's (ARRL's) Amateur Radio Emergency Service (ARES), prepared to swing into action with emergency networks that would run health-and-welfare traffic into and out of the disaster zone. As early as the Monday following the storm, hams throughout the hurricane zone were putting emergency stations on the air. In one instance, hams were instrumental in the rescue of 15 people clinging for life to a New Orleans rooftop. Meanwhile, in Alabama, amateur SKYWARN weather nets kept the National Weather Service apprised of conditions throughout the state. In hard-hit sections of Mississippi, hams running off generators and with makeshift antennas were the only means of communication, getting word to out-of-state friends and relatives concerning their loved ones.

There were numerous other instances of hams helping those who were not simply inconvenienced by the storm, but whose lives were in imminent danger. Now that things have calmed down in the Gulf region, many of the emergency nets have stood down. But hams continue to serve the public in the many areas that are still without power or phone service.

As our nation collects itself in the aftermath of the Katrina disaster, President Bush has promised federal reviews of what went right and what went wrong. One of the findings of those inquiries should be that the federally-instituted Amateur Radio Service, which functions under the licensing authority of the FCC, stood tall when the country needed it.

Amateur radio currently faces various threats to its existence. Chief among those is the advent of broadband-over-powerline (BPL) technology, which, if broadly adopted, has the potential to cause widespread interference to HF communications, not just for amateurs but for other services that use the HF spectrum.

Amateurs and the ARRL have made a lot of noise about BPL, asserting that it could seriously hamper their efforts and those of relief agencies such as the Red Cross and Salvation Army, in the event of a disaster such as Katrina. It's rumored, though, that the same FCC commissioners who have given their blessing to BPL field trials will now take a much harder look at the technical issues concerning BPL and its interference potential in the HF spectrum. Let's face it: The federal government didn't handle the emergency in the Gulf very well; it'd be prudent for it not to sanction a technology that could impede one of the few things that actually worked.

Many readers of this newsletter are amateur radio enthusiasts. If you are, and if you haven't already done so, consider writing your congressman to express your concern about the future of the Amateur Radio Service, especially in light of its outstanding efforts in recent days. Remind your elected representatives that a vibrant and unimpeded Amateur service can and will be a lifesaver when disaster strikes. Also, consider how you yourself might help. What if a hurricane, tornado, or earthquake ravages your area? Are you prepared to get on the air without relying on the mains to handle emergency traffic? Get in touch with your local amateur-radio club and find out how you can pitch in.

Your cell phones and wireless routers are indeed great stuff, but so is a good old HF transceiver. We shouldn't always be in such a hurry to let the flood of new technology wash away the old. The geek down the block with all the antennas on his property could turn out to be your best friend someday. Because sometimes, old trumps new.

Lol... I know America has vast areas compared to the UK but don't you think Police could have been equipped with CB radios in NO? I remember hearing the police bands were knocked out but I don't know whether they could talk radio to radio (Like CB) or if they needed to talk via a base. Obviously police couldn't have been issued with Amateur Gear (because they would be illegal operators) but CB stuff they used to use years ago would have assisted them greatly in that respect. Most of the squeaking you refer to would be gone due to base stations being off and cars being flooded. It would have to have been an organised person who remained on the air unaffected. Most of the CB fraternity would have heeded the evacuation call and got out or.. as so many Amateurs like to think of us, robbing the shops and being all lawless like. It must, in reality, have been a very scary hellhole for a lot of people and I certainly hope I never go through it.
I think all in all, joking aside, CB could have had (if it didn't anyway) a great part to play alongside Amateur radio in the relief and Police co-ordination efforts.

Regards,
Graham

The governor was only confirming what many of us in this hobby realize:

Ham radio operators have not served any useful purpose in emergency communications for a long time. The professionals pretty much ignore them. At most they talk to one-another in health and welfare nets and if someone actually calls in with an emergency all hell breaks loose because everyone wants to talk personally with the ham calling in.

Hams have this vision of themselves as the emergency communicators who while huddled in a dark storm beaten shack will get through to the outside world and save the day by using a car battery and some jury-rigged cw setup. And the hams on the outside see themselves as the unique link on the other end who will alert the authorities and direct them to the site before anyone else can because they alone have a connection with the emergency site. It's little more than mental masturbation folks 'cause the real world doesn't work that way.

Absolutely.
In Portugal, he was known as El Beatle.

He lived the lifestyle of a pop-star. Flash cars, big parties, all night drinking... and lots of loose women. He was also used as a fashion model, with people getting the catalogues just to see him in them.

Until that point, football had always been on the back pages of the newspapers - but he put it on the front pages. It really was amazing that he could play like that, with all those late nights and the alcohol.

Peter.

You misunderstand...

Due to his lifestyle, fashion and incredible fame, he was known as "The 5th Beatle" or "El Beatle". At that time, it was unknown for a footballer to live such a lifestyle and be so famous. Football had always been on the back pages of the newspapers.
He put Football on the front pages of the newspapers.

Because he was the first real Superstar footballer, people were singing...
"Georgie Best, Superstar".
As I remember, back in the 70s, many added the second line...
"walks like a woman and he wears a bra".

Peter

For the record. Morse code is not a boy scout requirement at all and in my several years as a Boy Scout Leader (my son went all the way to Eagle) I never met another scout leader or scout who knew morse code.

Even in the boy scout Radio merit badge requirements, morse code is an "ellective" requirement which any scout may pick to do out of a list of several Radio merit badge requirements.

There was a time when "some" USA police forces had CB Ch 9 monitoring capability. I recall seeing highway signs stating that to be the case, but its been a long time since I remember seeing such signage. I doubt many of those still do today.

It depends on the radio system being used. If it is a repeater based system, odds are that rules out direct car to car capability.

I don't recall even reading about any incident where CB was used at all. That doesn't mean it didn't happen somewhere, but it certaily appears that any CB activity was minimal at best in comparison to the role that amateur radio played.

Hello all,
I want to signal 5 years of notes of Electronic Engineering at the University of Rome Tor Vergata proposed to you in the shape of questionnaire with answers, I spend really much effort at that time and also now for the publication on Internet,
I would be happy if these notes could be of aid to other persons, you can find them at the link:

and for the electronics in particular:

The section dedicated to the electronics is at the moment not completed, in any case you can see the arguments I'll try to talk about at this link :

http://www.etantonio.it/IT/Elettronica/index.aspx

a great attention will be applied to the wireless sensor networks.

if you found any inaccuracy or error please let me know...

: This amp can be modified to have a small step up transformer,
: in the input circuit, just like the Pride DX-300 that uses a
: step up transformer.

Easy to talk about... not so easy to do in actual practice.

: Allowing a stock radio to drive the amp to its full output,

Wouldn't it be better or best to drive the amplifier with a converted ham radio? Better performance all around...

: PLUS! But the Pride DX-300 only uses a single 4CX250, with : a 500 to 700 watt output with a fresh tube.

Not in any case... you can't really get more than 310 watts RMS clean output from the Pride DX-300. Both the power supply and the tube will die a dirty death on the air... Blood from a turnip doesn't happen.

: Or maybe ya could put a set of 4CX800 Tubes in a Pride DX-300 with a : separate power supply, now that I would pay to see. Or a set of 4CX400
: Tubes, another great project!

Not worth it... not enough cooling to start off with.

: Jay in the Great Mojave Desert, ...just down the road ah
: ways from the fillin station.

Gas was really high priced last time I went through... :-)

What's weird is folks walking around today with brand labels, college labels, beer labels, music groups, etc on their shirts.
Why would anyone one want to be IDed with the Old Navy brand, KISS, or Coors Beer ??

I struck up a conversation with a chap that had Ohio State University on his sweat shirt -- turns out he never attended OSU - some one gave it to him !!

At least my shirt with my Ham callsign is ME.

Meet a lot of Hams that way too!

You can buy any radio as long as it was "type acceptance" when it was new!
Its the same thing with police scanners that received the 800MHz cell phones.
You can buy them used without a problem. As long as they were type accepted at the time of manufacture.

In point to point communications, it doesn't matter. But in the real world of emergency comms, voice is the usual mode, not CW.
IE: the fone hurricane nets, health and welfare nets, etc... Few are CW. But anyone can copy them if they were. Well... If you know code that is... I knew code well before I was a licensed ham.

>*But when the powers out so are the repeaters and also the mobile phones. CB >radio is more practicable in situations like this as anyone can use them not >just Amateurs.

Yea, but is there anyone on the CB bands I would want to talk to to pass the traffic, etc? I kinda doubt it. CB might be ok for very local neighborhood type stuff. Lets them keep in contact. But as far as actual traffic, or health and welfare, CB would be nearly useless to me.
Not knocking CB, just telling it like it is. I would be on HF, and VHF simplex. Also...The likelyhood of all the repeaters staying down for long is probably fairly slim, unless the actual antenna towers are down.
They can always bring a generator...You can also set up portable repeaters. IE: ad nausium... I'll be talking everywhere. Local and regional. CB wont. They will mostly be stuck in the hoods.

>How are they doing this? in what way? Who are they talking to?

Do they keep you locked in a closet? We do it in whatever way it takes to get the job done. We are like Marines. We adapt, overcome.
Who do we talk to? Nearly anyone who is involved. From the national weather service, to the coast guard, to local government officials, to hospitals, etc, etc.
You talk about the CBer's. Where were the CB'ers in NO when the people were stuck in attics with cell phones? The cell phones were working for many people. They would call for help on their phones, but there was no way to relay this to local police, etc...
Where were the CBers? They didn't seem to be capable of relaying the calls. How were these calls being relayed to local NO officials?
I'll tell ya...The people that the cell phone users would call, would eventually be routed to ham radios ops doing health and welfare traffic to/from the area. Most of this was on HF. 40 meters in the day, 75 meters at night. The 7.290 traffic net handled quite a bit.

Anyway, the traffic net people would get calls from relatives relaying the cell phone calls from the attic stuck people. You would have people in Houston, Dallas, Little Rock, etc, etc, etc, etc relaying these messages back to NO to be relayed to the police, fire, etc.
I heard many of these attic stuck relays on HF. So sorry, but your CB would be useful to the local is not really flushing. The CBers either were flooded themselves, or fell down on the job.
The hams using HF were the only ones reliably relaying these messages. And they were often 100's on miles away from NO.
I'm in Houston. So we also had our scare this year too. Believe me, I'm prepared to handle just about anything, and have been, well before any hurricanes hit the area. I have battery power here at home, and don't need no stinkin power. Ditto for mobile, portable. I'm fully self contained, power, radios, antennas. I can run off battery power indefinately. I recharge off the trucks. I have portable towers, masts, etc, etc, so I can set up at any remote location with 1st class antennas. We practice this at field day every June...

I can set up antennas portable, better than some peoples home antennas. IE: large yagi's, etc. I could act as the portable tower for a temporary repeater. Anywhere they want to put it. I drag it all on a motorcycle trailer.

>*I will be ready on my good old trusty CB to broadcast to the masses. More >accessible and cheaply available than Ham but im sure the both can work in >tandem.

There is a place for CB, no doubt. But I see CB as being good for the local neighborhood talk line where poeple can keep track of the people around them. It's pretty good for that. But handling actual emergency traffic? In most cases CB would be fairly useless.
For many reasons. IE: the frequency is wrong for that use.
IE: only 5 watts legally... IE: the wrong people are on it, if you are relaying traffic. Trust me. I have all of the currently used devices. Cell phones, CB's, ham radios, shouting with my lungs, etc. if I knew a hurricane was heading this way, I'd keep my ham radios over all of them any day of the week. Way more useful, with the wide spectrum coverage, antennas, radios, etc
I have. Here in Houston, ya wanna relay emergency traffic, get on ham radio. Ya wanna talk to a truck driver looking for grocers supply, get on a CB.. And I'm not bad mouthing CB.
Just stating the bleeding obvious. To me, CB is nearly useless.
In contrast, I can do nearly anything with the ham radios.
Including digi modes, fax, SSTV, etc...I can send documents, weather charts, etc, over ham radio. And I can do it all with one radio. My IC-706mk2g. Covers all bands, all modes. gen cov receive. Heck, it'll even do CB if you clip a dyode.... My is still locked though..Can you do all that with your CB? I doubt it unless it's ham rig... :(
Good luck in the next emergency... I bet more will line up behind me, than you, if they need to pass welfare traffic about people stuck in flooded attics. We proved ourselves at that job. We got many of them plucked out over those few days after the storm. I heard many of them myself live, in living color.

Many on 7.290 and the linked health and welfare nets.

As usual, ham radio operators help sustain wide-ranging relief efforts
By Andrea Kelly
ARIZONA DAILY STAR

When all else fails, it's ham radio to the rescue. Across Arizona, ham radio operators are helping sustain Hurricane Katrina relief efforts by helping storm-torn communities communicate with rescue workers and family across the country.

This is not a first. Ham radio operators come out of the woodwork during disasters around the world, even transmitting in Morse code if language barriers pop up, said Mike Swiader, president of the amateur Superstition Radio Club in Mesa.

Ham radio operators have contributed to emergency communication efforts since World War II, Swiader said, and were crucial in post-9/11 emergency communications, as well as during the Asian tsunami last holiday season.

Ham radios work when other communication systems are down because they're powered by solar energy, batteries or generators rather than the usual power sources.

The messages are passed from radio to radio until they get to the one they are directed to, so radios don't need to be near each other to receive signals, like regular AM/FM radio signals.

"We've been involved in passing traffic to and from the Louisiana and Mississippi area," said Tom Fagan, a leader of the Arizona ham radio operators organization. "Whatever needs to come in and go out, we're doing."

When Arizona's ham operators - there are about 16,000 of them - get messages from the hurricane area, they send them along to agencies like the American Red Cross and the Salvation Army in the Southeastern region of the country.

"We're the link," Fagan said.

Because communications within a disaster area are often jumbled, Swiader said, it's frequently easier for someone there to contact an operator in someplace like Arizona, who can then relay the message back to a recipient in the disaster area.

"Sometimes it's easier to be heard that way," he said.

More than 30 ham radio operators from Arizona have already headed toward the disaster area, hoping to assist relief efforts and give emergency workers a way to communicate with each other, as well as assisting searches for missing persons.

"They're moving in when they're allowed by American Red Cross and Salvation Army," said Ned Stearns, a Phoenix ham operator and vice director of the American Radio Relay League, the national organization for ham operators.

In fact, the ham operators plan to compile a list of people they can determine as missing, deceased, alive or unknown, based on information transmitted over the ham signals.

To find out about people in the area, visit www.satern.org and fill out the health and welfare information request for the person you are trying to find. This information will be sent through the Salvation Army emergency radio network.

Ham radio operators are helping from afar
Sunday, September 11, 2005
By DONNA FORK
For the Times dfork@knology.net

But sometimes, even the airwaves can be shut down

They also serve who listen and wait.

Huntsville amateur radio operator Douglas Hilton and other "hams" in North Alabama are helping victims of Hurricane Katrina by relaying messages between families, officials and each other.

Lately, Hilton's been spending most of his spare time in his "ham shack" listening to calls for assistance. The systems analyst for Intergraph Corp. is one of thousands of amateur radio operators who help people during emergencies.

Hilton is unusual in the ham radio world because he wears three hats: He is an amateur operator; a member of the Alabama State Defense Force, heading the Communications Platoon for North Alabama; and he's also a military communicator authorized to use the Military Affiliate Radio System.

His connection to the military (although he is a civilian) gives him access to additional radio frequencies most amateurs can't access. He has been a ham radio operator for 42 years; his father had him build a crystal radio when he was 7 years old, and he got his ham license as a teenager. But he wasn't all that active until after the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001.

"That hit me right between the eyes," he recalled, and he began to get back into "hamming."

Now Hilton averages about 100 hours a month on the airwaves and takes countless courses and certifications. He noted that amateur radio operators are "amateurs only in that we're not paid." In return for service "the government gives us frequencies."

Hilton said the North Alabama ham community is large.

"The astronauts are all ham radio operators," he said, noting that astronaut Owen Garriott "was the first ham in space."

Hilton''s "ham shack" is not really a shack at all. It is located in a formal dining room - complete with crystal chandelier. It includes six radios and two computers.

"You don't need six, but don't tell my wife, please," Hilton said as his wife, Diane, laughed. She recently obtained her "technician class" license, which is the entry-level license for ham radio operators. The next is "general class." The highest, which Hilton has, is "amateur extra." Anyone can be an amateur radio operator, Hilton said. There is no age limit: Hilton knows a local ham who is 18 and another who is 89.

It doesn't cost much to be an operator either, he said. A beginner could purchase enough equipment to get started for about $300. Courses are free through one of the local ham radio clubs, of which there are several, including the Huntsville Amateur Radio Club (the Web address is www.harc.net).

In addition to six radios, Hilton has two computers: a laptop and a desktop. "The radios are hooked into the computer." With his setup, the Hiltons can talk to other hams as far away as Japan.

But for the past two weeks there hasn't been time to chat about matters such as which antennas they like the best. There are emergency frequencies to monitor. At the moment, a critical one is the Salvation Army's emergency frequency, Hilton said.

Hilton never knows if it will be a busy night or a quiet one. Recent solar flares have added to the uncertainty because they disrupt communications. Friday, during the late afternoon and early evening, it was unusually quiet.

"I'm a little surprised," he said Friday. "I can't believe how dead these bands are."

Solar flare

It could be a solar flare, or could be something else. "That's the problem, you never know," he said. The waiting, the listening, "it wears you out." But it's worth it when you hear a voice and "you might be the only person who can hear this guy."

On Thursday night, when Hilton was expecting problems, reception was fine. He was able to contact two operators in Louisiana. He also heard one Mississippi ham talking to another ham "so at least one is working there."

ecause of the Hurricane Katrina disaster, there are thousands of messages piling up, waiting to be delivered by ham radio operators: What will happen when all their radios start working again?

People like Hilton will be extremely busy. There are thousands of ham radio operators in Louisiana and Mississippi. When they all get back to the airwaves, it will be quite a challenge to sort out all the messages.

But meanwhile, as they waited for the deluge of messages, on Thursday night the Huntsvillians received a call for help from New Mexico.

Maura Campbell Kingston of Clovis, N.M., was trying to reach her aunt, 76-year-old Sister Joan Campbell, a nun, of Harvey, La. Kingston called the Salvation Army, which contacted a ham radio operator, who called Hilton.

Hilton tried Thursday to reach a radio operator in Louisiana to check on Campbell, but almost all of them were off the air. Finally on Friday night Hilton got through to "KG5YK," who is Robert A. Turner of Elm Grove, La.

When Turner's message came through, hams from all over the United States could be heard, eager to talk with him.

Helping 'ham brother'

The outpouring of sympathy could not be contained: Radio operators from Texas, Indiana and elsewhere all expressed their support for their "ham brother" in Louisiana.

"I hope this never happens again," said Turner of the Katrina disaster. "It's been a tough time. ... I'm looking for the right words." He thanked the other hams for their all their help.

"You'd do the same for us," the ham from Texas said. Others echoed his sentiments.

Turner gave Hilton information about when to call with his "health and welfare message" about Kingston's aunt. Hilton vowed to keep trying to deliver the message "for as long as it takes."

But that proved to be unnecessary.

Friday night, after calling her aunt repeatedly, Kingston finally reached her by phone. She was still at her home in Harvey.

"She was OK," Kingston said in a telephone interview Saturday. "Harvey stayed dry." But the area was without power and Campbell "was sitting in the dark with her flashlight."

Later, Kingston called Hilton to thank him. She said he told her: "I'm just doing it because I want to help."

Kingston was impressed.

"I believe that thing about Southern hospitality."

Ham radio proves to be more than a hobby
By Jeannetta Edwards

Daily Times Leader

When Hurricane Katrina hit, telephone and cell phone communication hit an impasse because of downed lines and towers. But, amateur radio operators did not miss a beat or a transmission.

"Before and after the hurricane, this has proven to be the most reliable form of communication," said Randall O'Brien, a retired highway patrolman who has been involved with ham radio operation for 35 years.

"People thought when they got cell phones, they didn't need us anymore," said O'Brien, an advanced licensed operator, who often talks to missionaries in South and Central America.

According to Denver Baker, Clay County has more than 30 amateur radio operators, but only a small fraction are active.

"It's a wonderful hobby," said Baker, whose wife recently received her technician license.

The multi-faceted operation includes digital and satellite communication and is enjoyed by all age levels.

"This is a good hobby for seniors or for young people," said Baker.

By becoming a ham radio operator, which requires taking a test to obtain a license, people can communicate with others anywhere in the world.

"The classes for the test are free," said Baker, "and we help you with everything you need to know."

According to Baker, who has been enjoying this hobby for the last 10 years, the only investment required is the fee for the test and the purchase of equipment. A handheld transmitter cost around $100.

The self-policing group ensures that everyone adheres to the rules and regulations.

"We're called amateur radio operators, but there's nothing amateur about it," said O'Brien, who first became interested in electronic at age 13.

The group, which also belongs to the American Radio Relay League, meets monthly in West Point.

"We have a good bunch of hams in this area," said Baker. "We bring food at our meetings and have a good time."

"It's nice, especially for seniors," said Baker.

For information on getting involved in ham radio operation, call O'Brien at 494-2898 or Baker at 494-9096.

Ham Radio Operators Offer Help

By Beth Hahn
Mountain View Telegraph
Since Hurricane Katrina hit New Orleans last week, several ears in the East Mountains and Estancia Valley have been tuned to amateur short-wave radios.
McIntosh resident Ed Brooks said local Ham radio operators are willing to relay messages from the Gulf Coast if needed.
"We guys here in the Estancia Valley are just listening," he said. "We haven't had any need for what we can offer."
Although they may not be needed yet, Brooks said local Ham radio operators are still listening in to conversations taking place in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama.
During the interview with Brooks, his Ham radio was tuned to a conversation involving a Coast Guard helicopter that was rescuing a family from a rooftop in New Orleans with direction from another Ham radio operator.
Brooks said similar situations have been broadcast hundreds of times during the past week.
"It's been really spotty, but what we've been (hearing) is that it was good fortune that somebody down there had Ham equipment," he said.
Daryl Clutter, an Edgewood Ham operator and member of the Salvation Army's shortwave network, said he relayed a message from Ontario to U.S. Coast Guard officials in Washington, D.C., that originated in Louisiana.
"It was just the word 'help' spelled out two times," he said.
Like Brooks, Clutter said he has stayed close to his Ham radio since Aug. 29.
"There's been so much going on," he said. "Every day, something happens."
Clutter, a former truck driver who often delivered frozen food to the Gulf Coast, said radio traffic has slowed since the hurricane devastated the region.

"You just wonder who all you know, that used to be your customers down there, that are still alive or had the good sense to get out," he said.
As amateur radio operators, Clutter said, Ham enthusiasts practice for disasters "every day."
"There's only so many cell phone frequencies," he explained. "If the phone system goes down, there's no way ... (one company) could handle all the 60,000 or 70,000 phone calls."
Mountainair resident and Ham operator Bob Scupp said the Salvation Army network alone has handled more than 128,000 messages since Aug. 29.
Brooks said Ham operators have been relaying messages from residents to volunteers or emergency personnel. Since a large number of National Guard and military personnel have arrived in the area, Brooks said the messages have changed from pleas for help to questions about well-being.
Shelters for evacuees are beginning to utilize Ham radios to communicate with other shelters to help families find missing relatives, Brooks said.
Rescues are still going on.
"There's been instances where they're still finding people, trapped in houses, trapped in buildings or running out of oxygen," said Clutter. "It's just terrible what's going on down there."
Clutter and Brooks said they will not offer assistance unless someone requests contact in the Albuquerque area.
"We don't want to tie up the frequencies," Brooks said.
Clutter and Brooks said they will continue to listen to their Ham radios for messages or relay requests until communications are restored in the Gulf Coast.
"We live and breathe this," Clutter said.

Amateur radio operators provide vital communications support
By Teresa Atkerson
MCALESTER NEWS-CAPITAL (MCALESTER, Okla.)
MCALESTER, Okla. -

With more than 10,000 requests for help in finding loved ones, the amateur radio operators in Louisiana are extremely busy.

In fact, they are so busy, they have asked people to wait with their requests unless there is an extreme emergency.

Ralph Suter, with the Pittsburg County Amateur Radio Club, said they had about a half dozen requests for assistance in locating loved ones in the area devastated by Hurricane Katrina. &#65533;The Red Cross funneled the requests for health and welfare,&#65533; he explained. Now, the national traffic system is backed up with the requests, he said, because there were so many.

There are extreme problems with communications in New Orleans at the present time. Suter explained VHF radio has to have line of sight while amateur radio operators can use lower frequencies that can bounce off or curve to get the message through. ?A benefit of amateur radio is you can throw a piece of wire in a tree or up a flagpole. With 12 volts of power, you can operate on a local or even worldwide basis,? he explained.

As an example, Suter said recently an amateur radio operator in Louisiana had some kind of problem that he couldn?t get help with after the hurricane. He put out the message, it went through Washington state to Texas and then into Louisiana where the right people were found to help him.

Amateur radio operators can also communicate via Morse Code, upload through television or computer or radio to satellite, Suter said. That gives them even more advantages in communication.

Jim Russell, president of the PCARC, said amateur radio has been around as long as there has been radio. Even in World War I, amateur radio operators helped with messages in Morse Code, which is something operators today still must learn as part of their licensing process.

?We look at it as a hobby,? Suter said. ?It?s a resource of individuals because they have an interest to develop the skills to operate radios in various modes.

?It?s a resource for trained communicators.?

There are forms that must be used when transmitting messages. ?When it goes into the system at one point and comes out at the destination, it is exactly the same information, even with the misspelled words,? Suter said. ?It?s our responsibility when handling traffic that it comes out exactly as it comes in.?

Suter said many of the operators use their radios on a daily basis while others check weekly. When it comes to disasters, there is the Amateur Radio Emergency Service. ?It?s not really an organization but it is organized on a national basis for community programs.

John Wright, another PCARC member, checks with the Oklahoma Sooner Net and with the Salvation Army?s network, SATERN.

After the Oklahoma City bombing in 1995 and 9/11, Russell said amateur radio was used extensively. It is also used during and after tornadoes and other natural disasters. Now, the group can work with the Automatic Position Reporting System to help more accurately report severe weather.

The group has an annual field day, which is a combination of a exercise and a contest. ?We go out and set up radios under adverse conditions to simulate disaster response,? Suter said. ?In the past, we?ve started with solar power, using a battery in a car or even a portable generator.

?The last time I kept count, we were able to make contacts in 47 states, the Philippines, some in South America and Puerto Rico in a 24-hour period.?

Suter pointed out that the word “amateur” is not what people interpret it as. “People interpret it to be an unprofessional group. But while it’s made up of a lot of people for a hobby, it’s not unorganized or unprofessional when dealing with disaster. We have capabilities that public agencies just don’t have,” he said.

Members also have to be licensed. The license testing can be done in McAlester now so those wishing to be licensed don’t have to go to Dallas or Oklahoma City as in the past.

Teresa Atkerson writes for the McAlester (Okla.) News-Capital.

Old Technology Still Needed

Sept. 8, 2005

Overwhelming Charity

Joe Carcia, station manager of the American Radio Relay League in Newington, Conn. helps with the disaster relief effort for Hurricane Katrina's victims along the Gulf Coast. (AP)

If anything, Katrina has taught us the value of redundancy. The best way to make sure that messages get through is to have standby systems that can take over when others fail.

(CBS) There is a store in London dedicated to "appropriate technology." It mostly carries products designed to be used in developing countries where there is a weak communications infrastructure.

Sadly, that’s now the case for a large swath of the United States where Hurricane Katrina and its flood waters have wiped out cell phone towers, telephone switching stations, Internet routers and other ground-based communications systems. Even wireless Internet depends on nearby transmitters and receivers on the ground.

But amateur radio is working and, according to Allen Pitts of the Amateur Radio Relay League (ARRL), "ham" radio operators from throughout the country are answering the call to provide vital communications links. Satellite phones, a much newer technology, are also coming to the rescue.

Pitts acknowledges that cell phones and other technologies "work wonderfully when everything is going right," but "they are very vulnerable when everything is going wrong."

Just as with past hurricanes, earthquakes and on September 11th, the ground-based infrastructure, in many cases failed because vital parts of the system were damaged or overwhelmed during the emergency.

In other words, when you need them most, those cell phones are of no value.

Amateur radio, says Pitts, is not vulnerable to these problems "because each of the radio operators is a complete transmit and reception center unto themselves able to continue going and continue with nothing more than an electrical source, such as a battery or a generator, a radio and piece of wire for an antenna."

Listen to audio of Larry Magid's interview with ARRL's Allen Pitts.

While base-station radios are larger and require an electrical power source, there are also portable ham radios slightly larger than a pack of cigarettes with a range of about 20 miles, according to Pitts. Pitts says that the next sized radio, about the size of a paperback book, can communicate up to about 50 miles without a repeater while larger systems, "about the size of a desktop computer" can communicate globally.

Amateur radio operators are in demand. When I checked the ARRL's Web site there was a call from the Salvation Army for "10, two-operator Amateur Radio teams for deployment in the U.S. Gulf Coast. Operators must hold at least a General class license. Teams should be fully self sufficient in terms of food, water and lodging and plan to remain in the disaster area for from one to two weeks."

Pitts said there was a "lady in Connecticut," who was listening on her amateur radio and happened to hear that there was a woman "who was trapped for four days without food and water." She was able to relay that message, by ham radio, into an operations center that dispatched the fire department. A day later she got a call from the trapped woman's mother, thanking her for her role in the rescue.

Ironically, this comes at a time when amateur radio is struggling for respect and, to some extent, survival. What was once a popular hobby has fallen into somewhat hard times for a variety of reasons, including the fact that the Internet, cheap long distance calling, cell phones and other technologies make the ability to use these two-way radios not quite as compelling as it once was.

Also, there is a bit of a rift between some members of the amateur radio community and some parts of the Internet industry over the use of power lines to transmit Internet signals. This technology, which could put power companies into competition with cable and phone companies for broadband service, has been criticized by some ham operators because of possible interference problems.

Despite the fact that their origins go back to the early 20th century, hams are hardly low-tech. There are now bridges between ham operators and other technologies including the Internet, cellular phone systems and Internet phones. In fact, long before the Internet became popular, ham operators were using their radio gear to transmit data along with voice and morse code.

Also coming to the rescue are satellite phones. These phones - which are much more expensive to buy and use than cell phones - rely on satellites rather than ground equipment to communicate with the phone network.

Because satellites are in space, they're not vulnerable to conditions here on earth. Also, as long as you have a view of the sky, you're able to communicate. Iridium, which operates "66 low-earth orbiting (LEO), cross-linked satellites and 11 in-orbit spares," says it provides "complete coverage of the earth (including oceans, airways and Polar Regions)."

I carried an Iridium phone with me when I traveled to Peru a few years ago. It worked great when I was in the clear such as on a boat in the middle of the Amazon River but, because it requires a line of site view of the sky, it had problems in dense jungle and in cities with tall buildings.

Iridium spokesperson Liz DeCastro estimates that there are currently about 10,000 of Iridium's phones being used in the region with orders for about 6,000 more. The company sells through resellers so it doesn't have exact numbers. DeCastro says that "traffic in the region increased by 3,000 percent" since the storm hit and that the number of subscribers increased by 500 percent.

Satellite phones are a lot cheaper to use then when I went to Peru, but they still cost between $1 and $1.25 per minute to use, according to DeCastro. That's a lot more than domestic cell use, though often cheaper than using U.S. phones when roaming overseas. The phones themselves cost between $1,000 and $1,500 she says.

In addition to handling voice calls, satellite phones can also be used for messaging or data, albeit at modem rather than broadband speed.

If anything, Katrina has taught us the value of redundancy. The best way to make sure that messages get through is to have standby systems that can take over when others fail.

That's why some news organizations keep manual typewriters around. You never know when that old technology may suddenly become the "appropriate technology."

Amateur radio operators head to Gulf Coast

September 6, 2005, 1:00 AM EDT

NEWINGTON, Conn. -- Oscar Fuller only became an amateur radio operator about a year ago, but he knows how valuable his equipment can be in an emergency.

So even though he has never responded to a crisis, the American Relay Radio League member is planning to head to the hurricane-ravaged Gulf Coast and see if he can help establish an emergency communication network.

"This is a tragic set of circumstances," said Fuller, who recently retired from IBM. "If I can lend a hand, I want to."

Fuller and about 14 other members of the Newington-based amateur radio operator network have signed up to join the relief efforts for Hurricane Katrina. The amateur operators _ known as hams _ can often use their equipment to communicate in difficult circumstances.

Because the radio equipment operates on many frequencies, is self-contained and portable, it can often work when other communication networks, such as telephones, aren't working. It can never be blocked, which is why operators say it is good in disasters.

"When all else fails, ham radios work," said Betsy Doane of Shelton, who oversees the 2,500 members of the league in Connecticut.

David Patton, an official with the radio group, said as many as 750 volunteers may be needed. The Connecticut volunteers are going to help provide communication support for more than 200 American Red Cross Shelters in Mississippi, Alabama and the Florida panhandle.

"There are limited resources to an overwhelming disaster," said Allen Pitts, public relations manager for the radio league. "So there is not a ham on every corner. The hams are put where they are needed most of all, in emergency traffic or for saving lives."

Dennis Motschenbacher of Colchester was among the first volunteers to say he would go. He spent Sunday shopping for supplies and getting ready for the 18-hour, 1,100 mile drive to Montgomery, Ala., where he will be dispatched to a shelter.

"Everything I need, I'm bringing," he said. "There won't be any Radio Shack to go to."

The 57-year-old has been a ham for more than 40 years. He has operated his radio from places as far as East Timor and the Balkans.

The hardest part will be "seeing people in this troubled state _ smelly, sick, depressed, angry. And no matter what any of us do, it won't be enough for all of them."

Ham Radio Operators Pitch In To Hurricane Katrina Relief Effort
General Interest
09/07/2005
With communications out all over New Orleans and the Gulf Coast, the professionals are turning to amateurs to be their ears to what's going on in the areas devastated by Hurricane Katrina.

Local operators say they've been in touch with people in and around New Orleans since the beginning of the ordeal.

Ed McLaughlin, of Kennewick, says in the days that followed the disaster, he was able to help a family in Medford, Ore., get an update on how their relatives were. He's provided similar contact for a family in Chicago.

The reason-- ham radio, which is able to get in places that have no other means for communication when land-based infrastructure fails.

Ham radio has been such a success during these recent days that FEMA and the Red Cross are now using it as their primary mode for communication until other modes of communication are restored.

Ham radio helps close communication gap

Nixa man relayed message from president to New Orleans' mayor.

Joe Hargis works on his amateur radio in his home in Nixa. Hargis helped rescue an elderly woman by notifying someone who could contact rescue workers via radio.

If you've been unsuccessfully trying to get information about someone living in Hurricane Katrina's region of havoc, here's an avenue you may not have considered: local ham radio operators.

While cell phones rely on towers and traditional telephones rely on intact land lines, ham radios transmit from radio to radio, bouncing waves off the ionosphere in the upper atmosphere far above the Earth's tantrums. They can run off batteries, generators and sometimes even the sun.

Two Ozarks amateur ham radio groups - the Nixa Amateur Radio Club and the Christian County ARES (Amateur Radio Emergency Services) - have been relaying messages from people all over the world to those whose communication has been cut off by Katrina.

David Beckler, a ham radio operator from Nixa, even relayed a message Tuesday from the director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency in Texas to New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin.

"He had a message from President Bush to the mayor of the city of New Orleans," says Beckler, a New Orleans native who moved to Nixa six years ago.

Since the message was an emergency communication, the dispatch needed to go through the net control station on an emergency frequency, Beckler said. He knew it was important, because the ham operator had said, "break, break, break," which requires all other communications to yield and give that one priority.

"The net control station or other stations on this frequency could not hear this message," Beckler says. Beckler contacted the net control station, and people there asked him to contact the sending ham operator and relay the message back to that operator. "That's when he told me it was from President Bush."

Joe Hargis, another Nixa ham club member, also helped with an urgent message. "I was monitoring the SATERN network (Salvation Army Team Emergency Radio Network)," said Hargis, a retired elementary schoolteacher.

"A person called in with a piece of emergency traffic and the (receiving) person could not hear him. He said, 'Is there anyone on the frequency who can copy this?' I broke in and told him I could hear it fine."

Hargis relayed the message back to SATERN, and the operator there could hear Hargis well. "It was a 90-year-old woman and her elderly neighbors. They were afraid to leave their home because of the unrest in the neighborhood, things that were going on, and they needed assistance to be evacuated. They were running low on medicine, and one was running out of her oxygen supply."

Nixa ham club member Rod Kittleman says their members helped save the lives of a couple in New Orleans.

"A weak, disabled elderly couple were trapped in their attic. Their phone worked, but they couldn't get through to local authorities," the KADI radio program manager explains.

Too weak to break through their roof so emergency personnel could find them, the couple called their daughter in this area. She contacted the Nixa club, which relayed the message to a local ham operator who is licensed to operate on emergency frequencies.

"He got through to authorities in New Orleans over the radio, and they were rescued. (The ham operator) relayed the message back to their daughter. That's the reward we live for."

ARRL's Role In Rescue Offers Lessons For Future

Investigations into the communications breakdowns in our national emergency response systems continue. Yet I'm struck by the contrast between the hue and cry for upgraded infrastructure solutions and the much quieter revelation that old-school ham radio provided the only trustworthy communication during Hurricane Katrina.

New Orleans emergency departments' radios were wiped out when broadcast towers lost backup power generators. Police and fire departments only had citizen-band radios, offering inadequate bandwidth. Emergency responders lacked coordinated frequencies.

The National Guard cited antiquated communications technology-as a contributor to its delayed response. Lt. Gen. Steven Blum told USA Today that there was a shortage of high-tech radios and satellite communications gear. "We were underequipped," Blum told USA Today. "We don't need tanks and attack helicopters... but we must have state-of-the-art radios and communications."

The Guard has historically gotten "handmedown" equipment from active-duty military. It now uses "Vietnam-era radios while it needs 37,000 newer radios," according to Guard budget briefings.

Meanwhile, ham radio operators proved that older technology can be the most reliable technology. Our EDA Editor (and ham) David Maliniak wrote an online column on the subject, pointing out that sometimes "old works when new doesn't." (Read it and add your comments at ED Online 11136.) During and after Katrina, hams running on generators (sometimes with makeshift antennas) worked throughout the hurricane zone to put emergency stations on the air. They guided rescuers to stranded victims and updated weather services via the Hurricane Watch Net.

Amateur radio was the primary means of contact with the outside world for many shelters. It's estimated that some 1000 amateur radio volunteers helped serve the hurricane-ravaged communities and shelters, even providing communications for the Red Cross.

Still, the real lesson of the ham radio successes isn't that old sometimes trumps new. Upgraded, reliable hardware is vital for adequate emergency response. Amateur radio has continued to upgrade too. Hams use satellites, digital systems, cross-band repeaters, and more. As the American Radio Relay League (ARRL) puts it, the Morse code key may still be on the desk, but generally it's next to a modern system operable under extreme emergency conditions.

DISTRIBUTED NETWORKS

Katrina taught two key lessons. First, the Amateur Radio Emergency Service (ARES) organization proved effective because hams don't depend on a centralized infrastructure. When cell towers, phone switching centers, or other central communicationsnetworks are down, hams aren't. Many operators have their own generators and are ready to fire them up to get on the air when there's no power. National disaster response plans must assume that the centralized communications infrastructure likely will be crippled, so the emergency system must include a distributed or "mesh" networking scheme.

Second, ARRL succeeded because operators subscribe to a mission that comes with their licenses-to be ready to provide emergency communications whenever and wherever they're needed. ARES has a well-conceived action plan coordinated through the Radio Amateur Civil Emergency Service (RACES). ARES is part of the ARRL, and RACES is coordinated through the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA). But like the broacast system, the emergency plan is decentralized. Radio operators can work independently to serve their community as circumstances require.

A decentralized emergency plan requires deputized people who truly understand and care about their responsibilities. The best emergency response relies on distributed manpower, with first responders empowered to make decisions at the scene of the crisis.

It doesn't take a federal investigation to realize that the government's emergency-response debacle was caused by centralizing the decision-making with politically appointed bureaucrats who didn't have a personal mission or a true sense of ownership in ensuring preparedness. The fiasco with now-deposed FEMA leader Michael Brown exemplifies the folly of appointments based on cronyism, rather than the recruitment of people who have a passion, understanding, and commitment for the responsibilities they shoulder.

In this issue's cover story, Ron Schneiderman looks at government programs and the new technologies tackling our homeland security problems. But will the right people get those technologies? Too often, homeland security appointments and dollars are doled out according to political favoritism. As we saw in the recent emergency response, technologies are only effective when managed by people-like the hams-who take their responsibilities to heart.

Hats off to all of you who care about the quality of the security and emergency communications technologies you're engineering. Let's hope they end up controlled by people who care just as much.

A few months ago, NBC's Tonight Show staged a race between a pair of ham-radio operators with Morse-code keys and a couple of kids with text-messaging cellphones to see who could communicate faster. The hams won hands down, proving, in the minds of some, that old technology could hold its own against new. In recent days, ham radio was put to the test again by Hurricane Katrina. This time, however, lives were at stake.

In the world of design engineers and electronics in general, change is essential. Designers work diligently to make the fruits of their labors obsolete almost before they see daylight. The turnover in technology is sometimes like a flood, with old being washed away by new over and over. Often, the new beats the heck out of the old. But there are times when old isn't necessarily bad; in fact, sometimes old works when new doesn't. And then we're glad that old is still around, or at least we should be.

Wireless technology, while relatively new to many consumers, is of course not new at all. A few (very) old-timers remember the original "wireless" of radio. The revolution wrought by the pioneers of wireless changed the world then, and the technology behind that revolution has been re-invented and re-applied time and again. Its pre-eminent incarnation today is our near-ubiquitous wireless communications infrastructure, which has freed us from the shackles of landlines and made our mobile lifestyles possible. Technology truly is great stuff.

Until, of course, a monster hurricane comes along to render it nearly useless. Here we see a scenario in which a flood literally swept away the new. As Hurricane Katrina's fury hammered the Gulf states on August 29, the communications infrastructure took a devastating hit. Telephone service, including wireless, became at first intermittent and then unusable in many localities. Where there was phone service, 911 switchboards were often unreachable due to the massive volume of calls.

The response of local authorities, now termed "confused" by deposed FEMA chief Michael Brown, wasn't helping much. The Gulf Coast was about to descend into darkness, chaos, and, worst of all for many, silence.

But proponents of the old were at the ready. The "old," in this case, is ham radio. In the eyes of the "man on the street," ham radio has a pretty stodgy reputation. Aren't hams still using Morse code? Don't some of them use radios with tubes, for goodness sake? What the "man in the street" probably doesn't know is that it was amateurs who advanced the radio arts early in the 20th century. Down through the decades, amateurs have embraced (and often driven) all of the innovations in wireless technology, up to and including all digital modes and the Internet. But many have stayed in touch with their roots, which is good old-fashioned analog HF operation. And while amateurs have a longstanding tradition as innovators and experimenters, they also have a mandate that comes with their licenses: to be ready, willing, and able to provide emergency communications whenever and wherever they're needed.

As Katrina bore down on the Gulf region, amateur radio operators, under the aegis of the American Radio Relay League's (ARRL's) Amateur Radio Emergency Service (ARES), prepared to swing into action with emergency networks that would run health-and-welfare traffic into and out of the disaster zone. As early as the Monday following the storm, hams throughout the hurricane zone were putting emergency stations on the air. In one instance, hams were instrumental in the rescue of 15 people clinging for life to a New Orleans rooftop. Meanwhile, in Alabama, amateur SKYWARN weather nets kept the National Weather Service apprised of conditions throughout the state. In hard-hit sections of Mississippi, hams running off generators and with makeshift antennas were the only means of communication, getting word to out-of-state friends and relatives concerning their loved ones.

There were numerous other instances of hams helping those who were not simply inconvenienced by the storm, but whose lives were in imminent danger. Now that things have calmed down in the Gulf region, many of the emergency nets have stood down. But hams continue to serve the public in the many areas that are still without power or phone service.

As our nation collects itself in the aftermath of the Katrina disaster, President Bush has promised federal reviews of what went right and what went wrong. One of the findings of those inquiries should be that the federally-instituted Amateur Radio Service, which functions under the licensing authority of the FCC, stood tall when the country needed it.

Amateur radio currently faces various threats to its existence. Chief among those is the advent of broadband-over-powerline (BPL) technology, which, if broadly adopted, has the potential to cause widespread interference to HF communications, not just for amateurs but for other services that use the HF spectrum.

Amateurs and the ARRL have made a lot of noise about BPL, asserting that it could seriously hamper their efforts and those of relief agencies such as the Red Cross and Salvation Army, in the event of a disaster such as Katrina. It's rumored, though, that the same FCC commissioners who have given their blessing to BPL field trials will now take a much harder look at the technical issues concerning BPL and its interference potential in the HF spectrum. Let's face it: The federal government didn't handle the emergency in the Gulf very well; it'd be prudent for it not to sanction a technology that could impede one of the few things that actually worked.

Many readers of this newsletter are amateur radio enthusiasts. If you are, and if you haven't already done so, consider writing your congressman to express your concern about the future of the Amateur Radio Service, especially in light of its outstanding efforts in recent days. Remind your elected representatives that a vibrant and unimpeded Amateur service can and will be a lifesaver when disaster strikes. Also, consider how you yourself might help. What if a hurricane, tornado, or earthquake ravages your area? Are you prepared to get on the air without relying on the mains to handle emergency traffic? Get in touch with your local amateur-radio club and find out how you can pitch in.

Your cell phones and wireless routers are indeed great stuff, but so is a good old HF transceiver. We shouldn't always be in such a hurry to let the flood of new technology wash away the old. The geek down the block with all the antennas on his property could turn out to be your best friend someday. Because sometimes, old trumps new.

I live in Masachusetts, and worse still, Gov. Mitt Romney is a Republican. (Our Lt. Govenor, Kerry Healey is no mental giant either.) Both are children of the idle rich, and neither has any perception of the real world in which most American's live.

What is even more frightening to me, it appears obvious to everyone in MA that Romney is posturing himself to run for President, and Healey to run for Govenor. Brrrrr...What a chilling thought. I'm a long-time registered Republican, and quite frankly I seriously doubt that Romney and Healey combined would be qualified to run for the local position of Dog Catcher!

With respect to Ms. Jacobsen... For many years she was married to Chet Curtis, another local news anchor, a private pilot and I believe a ham radio operator as well. So it figures that she would have reacted to Romney's ill considered remarks dismissing the important role of amateur radio in disaster communications.

p.s., If the above predictions become reality, I will be re-registering as a Democrat and working my arse off to defeat both of these candidates.

Given the cheap cost of a CB these days, I think that any emergency comms center should have a CB radio.
In my home town we had a RACES set-up and had several HF and VHF ham radios, scanners for Monitoring local police/fire/etc
AND at least one CB radio.

What you need to do is consult with a lawyer with your deed restrictions. It would also be nice to get a copy of the public law and I believe it is 106-106 but I not sure. A seasrch of thomas.loc.gov should give you a copy of the text.

If in some way your deed restrictions have been weakened, then you are eventually going to have to deal with your association. Even if you are in the right I would not exclude them or they will make life a bitch. Believe me if the board of directors want you out they will force you out. They will find fault with the smallest of infractions.
Down to the heigth of the front yard grass to how clean your driveway

steve zero productions announces the greatest movie ever made about ww2. Starring an all keyclown cast, who play roles of American soldiers that operated ham radios illegally before the war. The keyclowns portray their fathers and grandfathers as they fight their way through Europe to meet up with German keyclown operators and start "piece" negotiations. The truckstop and Venereal disease ward scenes will make you laugh out loud, as these keyclowns show the cost of fighting to meet with the German keyclowns. The scenes where the keyclowns capture enemy keyclowns at rifle point as they order "PANTS DOWN!" are also unforgettable!

Most shops would be upwards to $45 just to open and diagnose the problem. Then there is the cost of parts. Most final transistors can easily be changed within an hour.

It would not be unreasonable to see a bill in the range of $50 to $75 for such a repair. IF you have a radio with a obsolete transistor with hard to find stock, you can expect to pay upwards to $35 to $40 just for the transistor.

The older Motorola power transistors are not impossible to find.
Rochester Electronics is the respository of all the obsolete Motorola masks for ICs and transistors. They will do a wafer run to customers who request. The main problem is you may have to buy 500 to 2000 pieces at a higher cost than original. This is way o ut of range for almost all CB repair shops and retailers don't want to fool with this as they are to little for profitability.

Hams have minimal and the CB lobby is next to nothing.

I personally can't see where power line internet will be a real challenge to current copper phone lines and fiber. With Verizon spending billions to string fiber to individuals homes, it wont be long before the lawsu its begin and they will have to grant access to these. Once that happens powerline DSL in the US is a foot note in history.

Not at all. My point was do Hams just talk to themselves or are they set up in important communications centres or are they at home, and phone up someone with the information passed to them?

If you had read my posts that was what i was referring to. Both services (CB and Ham) working together not CB instead of Ham... CB's could have been issued to the police to help organise themselves. They were not allowed Amateur gear because they arent licenced Hams. Then CB traffic passed on to Hams for the more distance and point to point stuff. THAT was what I was trying to get over.

Thats what he was referred to as. Doesnt matter what you think to its validity. Some people think Elvis was the king. I couldnt stand the Chump... but thats my personal feeling. I wouldnt ridicule his "king of rock and roll" title because thats what a lot of people thought of him as. George Bests lavish lifestyle was back in the 60s/70's and back then it wasnt as common as you think.

%*&$ing hell. "how much". 1969's are getting harder to source now since they have ceased production of them. The 2SC2078 10w transistor is a commonly used one in the straight 40 type rigs. Even so, id not charge any more than $25 unless there was a lot more involved than a simple tranny change...but then again, im not a shop.

There was one a couple of years back, which baked my Bartez. I must a watch, I had a watch mark for weeks after.

First of all. What happed to rec.radio.amateur? It is not supported on my server.

Second. I was a ham back in the 90s. I have been inactive since 1996. I had lots of gear and sold it all because I was tired of the hobby. I am beginning to regret selling some of it. I had some really nice antenna tuners, Heathkit SM220, nice TenTec radios, VHF/UHF all mode all the way up to 1.2G, etc. All gone.

I just acquired a Kenwood 520 to listen to the HF bands. It seems like a nice basic radio that will do for a while. I really would like to get on 80m but I don't have the room for a 80m dipole. Is the matching Kenwood tuner a good one? I think it will be a while before any good hamfests because of the Wx in chicago.

I researched rigs on line and so far I like the Icom 746 Pro but I'm not ready to spend that kind of cash.

I was also told that I can upgrade to Extra with just a written test. Since my license expires in 2 years it seems like the thing to aim for.

I still have a couple of ham friends so I will probably pick their brains, but I open to suggestions!

Correct, but I think he was getting ripped off, hence $50. I think there is a better replacement than the 1969, but don't recall what it was. In any case, I would do it myself.

Hy did? When did he get here. Does he know?

You've gotten the attributions so screwed up that it looks as if you're talking to yourself.

I am Mr. Gary Adams, Senior Credit Officer, Barclays Bank Plc London. I am writing following an opportunity in my office that will be of immense benefit to both of us.

In my department we discovered an abandoned sum of ?12.5million British Pounds Sterling (Twelve Million Five Hundred Thousand British Pounds Sterling) in an account that belongs to one of our foreign customers Late Mr. Morris Thompson an American who unfortunately lost his life in the plane crash of Alaska Airlines Flight 261, which crashed on January 31 2000, including his wife and only daughter. You shall read more about the crash on visiting this website.

http://www.cnn.com/2000/US/02/01/alaska.airlines.list/>
http://www.nativefederation.org/history/people/mThompson.html> Since we got information about his death, we have been expecting his next of kin or relatives to come over and claim his money because the Bank cannot release the funds unless somebody applies for it as next of kin or relation to the deceased as indicated in our banking guidelines.

Unfortunately I learnt that his supposed next of kin being his only daughter died along with him in the plane crash leaving nobody with the knowledge of this fund behind for the claim. It is therefore upon this discovery that I and two other officials in this department now decided to do business with you and release the money to you as the next of kin or beneficiary of the funds for safe keeping and subsequent disbursement since nobody is coming for it and we don't want this money to go back into Government treasury as unclaimed bill.
We agreed that 20% of this money would be for you as foreign partner, while the balance will be for my colleagues and I. We will visit your country for the disbursement according to the percentages indicated above once this money gets into your account.

Please be honest to me as trust is our watchword in this transaction.
Note that this transaction is confidential and risk free. As soon as you receive this mail you should contact me by return mail whether or not you are willing to enter into this deal. In the event you are not interested, I sincerely ask that you disregard this email and tell no one about it. I am very careful on truncating my banking career should you mention this to someone else. I hope you can be trusted in this regard.

Please note that all necessary arrangement for the smooth release of these funds to you has been finalized. We will discuss much in details when I do receive your response.

Please in your response include your telephone and fax numbers for a better communication between us.

You can reach me on the email below

Back in the 1960s, it was unknown for a soccer player to act that way and get such fame. It was the Portugese who named him "El Beatle", but the name stuck and has long been referred to in books.

> Thats what he was referred to as. Doesnt matter what you think to its

I have also heard other people dispute his title, suggesting that some other rocker of the day was the real king.
But, if you mention the king of rock and roll, people know you mean Elvis Presley.

> George Bests lavish lifestyle was back in the 60s/70's and back then it Certainly not here in England. Such behaviour shocked the British, as certain American rock stars found out. From what I can gather, it was the British press who, shocked by certain information, brought down one of the big rock and roll legends of the time.

Peter.

Not sure about the sale of such a radio at this point in time, but you can give it away legally,,,,,just like beer! You can't legally sell a beer to an adult (without an alcohol license) but you can give him one free. "Buy a sticker, get a free beer" worked at many venues for years.

Many? Name two, just two of the "many" you purport do not support cb ops who have expressed a desire to get licensed. You're full of biased shit.
Of course, you could always prove me wrong by illustrating two of the farcical "many" you claim do not support cb'ers seeking to get licensed.

>Soon the code will be dropped and it will be >easy to get a license.

It's easy to get a license now.

Being of the mindset that code prevents cb'ers from getting licensed is your right, but it's not correct and serves only to illustrate your own difficulty and prejudices concerning cw.
Now, about this "many" of which you speak....

Doubtful. The governor is an intelligent man and made no mention of cb.
Acceptance of criticism of ham radio has always been a sore spot for some ham ops, regardless the origin. Some, like yourself, steadfastly refuse to accept what is given them in black and white if it happens to contrast with your myopia.

Me too. Its a pretty simple job as long as you can use a soldering iron and you have just an inkling of common sense. The New replacement for the 1969 is an ERF-2030 which is rated at 25w. It might need companion parts depending on the set up. There's more info on this on the front page of my website.

That's the wrong reason to change parties. First of all, look at your values and compare them to the values & policies of the various parties. Join that party whatever it may be and whoever may be the leaders. Then if you don't like the leaders, work your arse off to get different leaders within the party. What good does it do you to joint a party which may be diametrically opposed to your points of view !?

It will need support components unless it is going into a FET based radio with biasing tactics in place. Also note that the ERF2030 is a IRF520 available for quite cheap, the schematic for the support components is out there. I am going to start expierimenting next week! I'll let you know how it turns out!

Yes it is simple to do, but as to tha tsoldering iron, I repaired a soundcard for sombody (some lose part).
he then also bought a 'soldering iron', told me, nextr time I will fix this myself ;-)
Showed me the soldering iron.. it was one of those soldering pistols.... you know the type that heats a thick wire basically to solder.
So 'soldering iron' I have a nice temerature controlled one with a lot of tips of different shapes.... will keep your PC board and RF parts alive.
Now about that guy how used S39 as soldering flux...
;-)

No actually I said its better than some of the new junk out there, not nothing that has ever been produced since 23 channel rigs.
If you weren't so busy laughing and LOL'ing you just might be able to quote correctly. I never stated which 23 channel rig I was comparing to the new radios. Are you that up on the radios that you can state that all the new radios are better than my 23 channel radio?

Why would we trust your WEB page?

You have this statement on your WEB page:

Remember, connect a busy system as follows,
CB - Pre-amp - SWR meter - Linear - Antenna

Why would you put any SWR meter before the Amp?

If your SWR can't handle the power output of your amp, Do you think putting it there would give you an accurate reading of the SWR on your antenna?

In fact I just had to stop typing as I was laughing some more just thinking about it.. lolol

Dee, it's too me that the fundamental principles of the Republican and Democratic parties don't vary much, extreme in the fringe edges.

On the other hand, when you have candidate of either parties who are total incompetent, such as Mitt Romney and Kerry Healey who not only are incompetent and also don't have a hint of a clue, it is critical to limit or inhibit their aspirations by whatever means is needed. The same can be said about John Kerry, in the last election. Kerry is a total and demonstrated dumb ass, who is only in politics to advance his rather egotistical ambitions. I would rather vote for his wife than him, in future senatorial contests.

By contrast, I rather like what Ted Kennedy does in the senate, even though I am a conservative Republican.

Perhaps I'm strange, but I would rather vote on a candidate based upon their past performance and voting record in the job, than then their party affiliation. What they professs to believe doesn't really do much for me.

Party loyalty also doesn't do much for me.

Better yet, opt out of the sheeple-orientated party system and vote for the CANDIDATE who best matches your politics. Urge your friends and family to do the same. Only then will we get candidates who listen to PEOPLE, not to moneyed interests.

Greetings Tom! I have one sitting right here beside me. I knew I had one, but could I find it was the question. I would take $5.00 plus actual shipping USPS cheapest way unless you want it shipped otherwise. If you have a Teaberry mic I would trade you even. Let me know. Jon in South Carolina. KG4GFU. Oh by the way the mic is in pretty decent shape for it's age. It is still wired for four pin screw on, SBE I imagine. The SBE on front in blue is in good shape with a tiny 1/16" scratch at the far left side of the blue outline around SBE. The back of the mic shows normal wear, but seem to work properly.

Lancer my friend, you said in your previous statement the "new junk out there". If you have a 23 channel radio then "Anything" that has 40ch is a newer rig (Junk) it was you that wasn't being specific. I personally would only use them for doorstops but were all different so if your happy sitting there with your 23 channels mate you go for it.
Pardon me while I chuckle to the others on channel 24 ;o)

Sorry, but thankfully that bit of British trivia didn't make it to this side of the Atlantic. Freddie Mercury was taking up all the pic space from England at that time.

I was born a "Brummie" Pete ;o) but left school in 79. When i left school i was living in Chelmsford to which shortly i moved to Abaraeron in West Wales. Then i moved back to Brum and now Skegness. Ive been about a bit so you would have thought id have picked it up from somewhere (no, not the clap ;o) The Jesus christ superstar bit i remember being from the mid 70's but i was never into football but i do remember some of the George Best stuff.

French eh... I remeber the talk not so long ago of the CRT Superstars being a bit pants compaired to the earlier Black models. I had a couple and indeed eprommed a few but never really felt they were as bad as some people thought. I still think a lot of the Cybernet based rigs still hold their own compaired to the newer stuff, maybe not with looks so much but with quality of RX/TX. Cybernet sidebanders though a different story completely..... yuck !!

What is it with rec.radio.cb and the "interest" in everything Gay..... As for Trivia.... there was an article I referred to once from one of the national newspapers who ran an experiment and found American people the least knowledgeable to the things that happen outside their own country... You have just helped prove that point by referring to Best as Trivia.
Im sure you aren't the typical American as far as knowledge goes... at least I hope not.

A valid point but if its simply changing a transistor im sure there wont be a problem. Thenagain if its "supertuned" by Mr fiddle merchant at the same time then that's a different story ;o)

You dont have to trust it. Its a pointer. If your interested do a websearch and clarify anything you feel unsure of.

Im suprised you question that. What would you think will happen if you shove 150w upwards through a cheap basic SWR meter?

> If your SWR can't handle the power output of your amp, Do you think

No but its going to be more realistic then it pinging off the scale with extra power going through it. If its left in line it will also cause much greater interference than being before the linear. Think about it.

I just put up a vertical ground mounted Hustler 5BTV. Works great on 20-40-80.

I have the 746 non-pro. Works great. Watch out for the "Pro". It has a flaw causing the TX to fail, that has yet to be corrected. Here are some searches:

http://www.google.com/search?sourceid=navclient&ie=UTF-8&rls=GGLD,GGLD:2005-08,GGLD:en&q=i
com+746+dead+TX

Here are the eham.net reviews. Notice the non-pro has much less problems and better reviews.

Simple, If you are running power, don't buy a cheap SWR meter. It's good to have the meter after the amp. You will need to see the reflected power in case the antenna is rejecting harmonics. At which point you should cease operation.

I could care less what SWR the amp is showing my radio in most cases. I'll check that very occasionally. I DO CARE about overall reflected power from the antenna. This is quite important!

Hi All;
Due to moving soon, I have 3 CB radios for sale.
Below is a picture, All are made in Japan, not china, all have original mikes & dc power cords.
Only the bottom Kraco has a Bracket.
They have been checked for output and all are in great shape/clean, not flea market trash
The top is a GE 40 channels, analog readout!
The middle is a Sharp 40 channel w/digital readout.
Bottom is an older Kraco deluxe, 23 channel, analog readou!
All 3 units for $40 plus postage.

Inserting it there you can measure the SWR of the antenna/feed and not worry about leaving it inline and firing up the linear which might cause damage to it. You can check the SWR before powering up the linear to make sure its somewhere satisfactory. Its not going to be exact by any means but it will give a reasonable guide. Also im not referring to high quality equipment, its aimed at the beginner with basic gear to give them a broad idea.
Obviously as you get more technical you will have your own ideas. Dont forget the other option directly under that referred to statement which was for the more higher rated SWR/PWR meter.. ie CB pre-amp - Linear - Swr/Pwr meter - Antenna.

It is recommended by many that you only have the SWR meter in-line while checking out your antenna/feed. The extra connections on your feed and the gap where it goes un-shielded through the SWR meter means theres a greater chance of causing interference. Put that with the fact you are shoving a much greater power through this gap and the chances of interference go up greatly. Are you disagreeing with this?

Then I best not chuckle on the 2-4 in case you are on one of them ;o)

Thanks for that. I was going to include a vintage section to show the 23 channel radio's and the old cooker dials. Its still in the ideas pending pile but if I do I know who to ask for some pics of them. I was also toying with the idea of an American rig doctor list but im not sure if it would be a success. What do you or anyone wishing to comment think? Any other "useful" comments off people would be gratefully received as ive got oodles of space left but don't want to fill it with un-interesting things. Even though the website is UK based threes a lot of FCC equipment info on there and I have no trouble increasing this.

Hi Chad,
I think unless you saw the original item on my website you wouldn't have seen the "other" option directly under it which says for the better quality SWR/PWR meters to go directly before the antenna. Im not sure if Lancer is picking up on this one point and missed the next line because he was chuckling at me chuckling at him, and yes, I also agree reflected power from the Antenna is important especially when kicking power.

That said its amazing to me the amount of people who go on air and seem to work reasonably well who have never even heard of a SWR meter never mind tuned in their antenna... scary stuff.....that's one of the reasons I had an accessory page on my website and a brief description in layman's terms of what they are for.

Graham

Its a good picture you have there. Do you mind if I use it on my website in That's good then. Is your 23ch CB one with a cooker dial? Im not sure if they all were or if there was a few LED readout before they changed to 40Ch?

I used to have an old Alan K350B I think it was which was quite a large 40ch radio and that had a cooker dial so maybe there's a few out there of both types.

Such behaviour shocked the British, as certain American rock stars found out. From what I can gather, it was the British press who, shocked by certain information, brought down one of the big rock and roll legends of the time.

Well, if they never check reflected power or don't even know what it is and

Dave Sumner, K1ZZ
ARRL Chief Executive Officer
American Radio Relay League

Newington, Conn. 06111

1 December 2005

Dave,

What is W1AW's current policy with regard to its bulletins, and can you refer me to the ARRL Board minute which established this policy? Specifically, does W1AW listen and/or QRZ each published scheduled frequency before transmitting? If the frequency is busy, does W1AW QSY, delay, or even terminate the scheduled bulletin?

The policy published in QST that I have found is to stick to the published schedule regardless of whether the frequency is busy or not, just as is the policy of K1MAN for information bulletins, which is also consistent with many years of W1AW operating practice as well.

Yow will remember that K1MAN was "fined" in 1990 with regard to this policy, and my appeal of these "fines" to the full Commission was "deep sixed" and thus blocking my further appeals to the D.C. Court of Appeals and the United Stated Supreme Court. Also, these "fines" were never litigated in Federal District Court here in Maine, and my subsequent civil suit to resolve this matter in Federal District Court against the FCC was dismissed. My related civil suit in Federal District Court against ARRL was also dismissed. My many attempts to resolve this matter have thus been repeatedly thwarted. K1MAN was then "fined" again regarding this same policy in April of 2005, a full fifteen years after the original FCC action, thus creating a further legal nightmare for the Commission, of course.

I am a member of ARRL. Thank you for your attention to this request.

Best personal regards. 73.

Actually, I regularly watch the BBC news here. I find the French have stories that aren't quite so Euro-centric. The problem is that "football" games on these shores are usually watched by nostalgic immigrants in stadiums that are 95% empty. Even our 5th sport, Tennis outdraws "football" by a wide margin. I'd hardly judge IQ or knowledge based on whether or not someone knows a relic from a sport that they're not interested in.

Now the 'heyday of CB' - that was interesting, but no less a relic. At least here.

Sadly, gay is pretty much what seems to fill the papers here about England when it comes to Pop Culture. Elton John, Graham Norton, Dame Edna, Dusty Springfield, Boy George, and Freddie Mercury (who I believe was really bi, but I wasn't interested enough to find out).

Funny, a year ago and I would've expected to hear about how dumb Americans were for voting for Bush. But that was before Tony got another shot wasn't it?

The survey wasn't in football. It was current affairs and events. Still, that said the amount of publicity the guy has been getting around the globe should have been noticed by some of you. Anyhow I was on about knowledge of things outside of the US not IQ levels. These are unrelated and in no way was I trying to imply Americans were thick.
If Honus Wagner died today (yes I know he's already dead) a lot of people here in the UK would know all about it in the following few days even though they wouldn't probably follow baseball. I take it you know who Honus was?

I doubt that CBs are sending morse code. I heard some CW signals that sould like beginners too so perhaps there is some new blood in the hobby.

Anyway I would rather be listening to the radio that read some of the crap that is posted in these newsgroups. I don't the condition of ham radio but I must say the condition of news groups associated with ham radio have declined a lot since I last read them.

I must say that someones advice to find a local club is the way to go. At least people there are interested in HR and not just there to kick other people or make dirty jokes.

Not from me you wouldn't have. As far as Blair goes im neither for nor against. I don't see him doing any worse than any other Prime minister/President in recent years. As for the papers... like I said.. they seem to be obsessed with GAY issues. All sounds a bit queer to me...

Heh.. nobody out there willing to "Elmer"...

However, there does seem to be a plethora of people looking to inflate their egos, or better yet, sit and tell others how clueless they are; and call it teaching.
Then there's a few that I'd swear could literally dumb another person to death with their random babble.
It's funny [and not limited to ham radio] that only the 'can't teach' types always seem be the teachers.
Plus, I've never met a ham that wasn't involved in/obsessed with, a power-struggle of some sort.
Who needs it?

No one wants to show you how to do something, they just want to talk about how you can't.
[see below]

The truly intelligent only pass through amateur radio, finding out they were better off without it.
So, yes ma'am, nothing left but appliance ops and CB-types that won't listen to anyone and think they know it all.
It's a pathetic cycle, eh?

Oh, and ham isn't going anywhere... it's akin to a bug on a windshield....
wipe on it and all you get is a bigger mess that still won't go away.

And homebrewed. During the late sixties and even into the early seventies, many ops were running rigs homebrewed in the fifties.
Yup although I never knew any in the late 60's, other than amps. I had a home brewed 6146 x2 and built a power supply for it from the '70 ARRL handbook as it was just the rf deck.
I had a friend, also now a ham since '70, who had a home built amp with 4 572b's and a 4kv pwr supply. Gee, that was fun to run into a 5 element Cb Longjohn!! He had a set of Drake twins back then to drive it.

Congrats.
....Thanks
>I am in support of all CB ops who want to

Many? Name two, just two of the "many" you purport do not support cb ops who have expressed a desire to get licensed. You're full of biased shit.
Of course, you could always prove me wrong by illustrating two of the farcical "many" you claim do not support cb'ers seeking to get licensed.

....You are the one full of shit! Go to QRZ.com and check out the many threads regarding issues related to this and see what you think!! I am only too aware of all the orthodox hams out there!

>Soon the code will be dropped and it will be

It's easy to get a license now.

...Compared to when I got my (had them all) licenses it sure as hell is!!
Try taking them in an FCC office when you know the engineer in charge has had complaints in the past about you bootlegging on CB!

>GOOD! The more hams the better!

Being of the mindset that code prevents cb'ers from getting licensed is your right, but it's not correct and serves only to illustrate your own difficulty and prejudices concerning
cw.
Now, about this "many" of which you speak....
...Trust me I can copy quite well. Contest speed is about 30 wpm, chit chat is about 20-23 wpm. I prefer to use CW for working DX or contests, but not so much for chit chat Q's. I am not by any means anti-cw. I just do not think proficiency in it suggests you will be sort of a "squared away ham".
Nor do I think CW will die away. I do not find it to be either a reliable or valid indicator of overall proficiency in ham radio. Perhaps you think it would be best to have a typing test as an element for ham tests? No? Why not? RTTY, various digital modes such as PSK-31, all require typing to some degree. Hell! If you can't type you are gonna have a hard time competing in contests (should you desire to)! You pretty much have to be able to type well to log maybe 1000 Q's in a weekend contest into a logging program. It is not that Morse prevents CB'ers from becoming hams! Myself and several friends are sufficient proof of that! It is clearly the mindset of the learner that prevents them learning it and geetting a license! That is not the issue to me. My opinion is that there are more important things to know than Morse to get started in ham radio. "Many" only means a large number, numerous as defined by Mr. Webster. Pretty subjective definition don't you think?? It doesn't mean most or an overwhelming number, or even 51 percent, just "a lot". CUL in KW alley! _._

There are quite a few on this newsgroup who every day belittle people not holding full licences, CB'ers Intermediates/M3 alike. Mind you, the fact they are on here and not the radio makes me sometimes think are they genuine Hams or just Trolls. If you want me to name them ill take a few hours searching through the old threads but feel it to probably be a waste of my time as we all know who use these groups regularly who they are.

In backing you up though ive yet to "meet" a Ham who doesn't encourage "good" CB radio users to progress into their hobby. The negative feelings seem to emanate from these newsgroups so I for one do not take it as commonplace the attitude of the few in here. I genuinely hope anyone thinking of progressing to the Amateur bands isn't put off by these Biased few.

Graham

Hello Tiny:

The Moonraker 4 is a great beam antenna. It was designed around inexpensive parts, but was very well designed and operated very well. Having good gain and great rejection.

There are mods out there that install more reflector wires on the quad reflector. But this will only degrade the Moonraker 4 performance big time. This being proven with many experiences, and seeing the beams pattern be distorted from Eznec, a antenna molding program.

The best thing that you can do is use good coax like the LMR-400 and install the Moonraker 4 on a tower, getting the antenna as high as possible, with a good rotor, like a HY-Gain 4 or Tailtwister Rotor.

The problem mostly seen with the Moonraker 4 and 6, and PDLII beam antennas is the use of the Cast Aluminum Hubs that attach the elements to the boom. Four elements are attached to the Boom using these cheaply manufactured Cast Aluminum Hubs. After 30 years plus in service these Cast Aluminum Hubs crack then break after being removed and then reinstalled again. The best advice is to try to not disturb them.

As the Cast Aluminum Hub is tightened down to compress against the boom is when the crack and breakage will happen. Even new hubs crack and break, as I have seen this many times. But when the manufacture was around supplying replacement hubs there wasn't much of a problem. But now the manufacture is long gone, these old used hubs have been sold on E-Bay for 50 dollars for a pair of old unknown condition hubs.

I have had new design hubs made from 6061 T6 Billet Aluminum, but there not cheap.

I am now rebuilding a Moonraker 6 beam antenna. The Boom has been replaced with a larger stronger 2 inch diameter Boom, and the boom to mast Mounting Plate has been replaced and upgraded. The Hubs have been replaced with the new billet hubs, the over designed truss assembly has been replaced with a simpler one. The Gamma Matches have been replaced with a center feed driven element, Hairpin Match, and Balun. The original elements are the only thing being used from the original antenna.

Photos will come out shortly.

serves only to illustrate your own difficulty and prejudices concerning
cw.
Now, about this "many" of which you speak....

I believe you.

>Contest speed is about 30 wpm, chit chat is >about 20-23 wpm. I prefer to use CW for >chit chat Q's.

Well then, we have much in common regarding dx selection.

> I am not by any means anti-cw. I just do not >of a "squared away ham".

The same goes for ham licensure, period.

>Nor do I think CW will die away.

Nor do I.

>I do not find it to be either a reliable or valid

>indicator of overall proficiency in ham radio.

Well, an indicator of advancement in the hobby is most certainly code.

>Perhaps you think it would be best to have a >typing test as an element for ham tests?

Nah!

>No?

>Why not? RTTY, various digital modes such >as PSK-31, all require typing to some degree.

Because digital modes and apparatus isn't as fascinating to the dx-loving oldtimers compared to simply doing it yourself with nothing but the rig, the antenna, sky, and mother nature.

>Hell! If you can't type you are gonna have a >hard time competing in contests (should you >contest into a logging program. It is not that >Morse prevents CB'ers from becoming hams!

The glass is half empty from your perspective, half full from mine.
There is no argument or contention among anyone that amateur radio declined when the nocode ticket was introduced.

>Myself and several friends are sufficient proof

>of that!

The increased number of actions taken by the FCC against nocodes compared to the number of actions taken against other class of licenses is proof of the decline, not your personal experiences.

> It is clearly the mindset of the learner that >prevents them learning it and getting a >license! That is not the issue to me. My >opinion is that there are more important things >to know than Morse to get started in ham

Yet others regard it as the foundation. Considering SOS is universal, code can get through when no other communication will, even if one must bang on an object. Extremely helpful in dire emergencies.

> "Many" only means a large number, >numerous as defined by Mr. Webster. Pretty >subjective definition don't you think?? It >number, or even 51 percent, just "a lot". CUL >in KW alley! _._

Fair enough. The matter is, there have been no reg contributors to this group who have spoken against or try and prevented a cb'er from obtaining a license. expressing a personal opinion of why an individual chooses not to get licensed is not the same as speaking against another who chooses to do so.

We push his buttons and he explodes in vitriol. AKC's complete mastery of this queenboi is so fun to see in action. This must be what the first guy with a remote control TV felt like!

steve zero productions announces the greatest movie ever made about ww2. Starring an all keyclown cast, who play roles of American soldiers that operated ham radios illegally before the war. The keyclowns portray their fathers and grandfathers as they fight their way through Europe to meet up with German keyclown operators and start "piece" negotiations. The truckstop and Venereal disease ward scenes will make you laugh out loud, as these keyclowns show the cost of fighting to meet with the German keyclowns. The scenes where the keyclowns capture enemy keyclowns at rifle point as they order "PANTS DOWN!" are also unforgettable!

Don't miss the epic production of "SAVING RYAN'S PRIVATES" Coming to a gay porn theater near you!

I heard that they are doing away with free medical services. At first I was happy as freeloaders like you make it tough on the working man. Then I got to thinking, OH NO, how can dogie afford his mental health drugs? Soon your ranting and raving will be at an all time high. Then the idea hit me, get rid of section 8 housing. Then you can walk up and down the street with your computer under one arm and your ham radio under the other.
To the rest of the group, when it comes election time, vote for a candidate that...
A)Supports the elimination of free healthcare to freeloaders such as Dougay.
B)Supports the elimination of section 8 so Dougay will have to get a job or a cardboard box.
C)Supports the elimination of foodstamps as Dougay could stand to lose some poundage and will have to get a job.

Clearly, you have much to learn about IP numbers and tracing people.
As you seem to have been totally lost by all previous attempts to teach you the facts, I will take this slowly...

OK, first of all, you can only trace someone if the following applies:
1. They are connected to the Internet when you try to trace them.
This should be obvious to anyone of reasonable intelligence.
2. You must know the IP number allocated to their computer at the time you wish to do the trace. A dynamic IP may have been reallocated, or may simply lead to the ISP servers.
3. Their computer must be willing to respond to your echo request.

Now, how that applies in this situation:
Not being an Internet Junkie, I connect to send the messages then disconnect. As was said earlier in this thread, my posts take a certain amount of time to appear on the newsgroups... by which time I have been off-line for some time. (SEE RULE 1)
As I have a dynamic IP, when I do reconnect, the number will be different. (SEE RULE 2)
My system is running in "stealth mode", it totally ignores echo requests. (SEE RULE 3)

You bummed out on all three requirements, so have been tracing ISPs, servers, offices, or whoever was allocated that number at the time you did the trace.

> 13 133 ms 66.185.140.10 pop1-dtc-P15-0.atdn.net Birmingham UK

66.185.140.10 may have traced to Birmingham at the time you did the trace, but that was not even my IP number. I think you need to learn basic number recognition....

> 66.185.140.10
> 195.74.110.227

Can you see a slight difference between the two IP numbers?

Maybe it's because the media know what will get the interest or attention of the American public. Our media is no different, they pick out the most outrageous stories, twist them about a bit, and release them on the public. If there is nothing shocking, they get creative and think up a story.
Sales and ratings set the direction.

Yes. He had a female "friend", but always had this love for his fellow man :~)
But he was just what the people wanted from pop back then, the 70s was the campest decade in pop. There has been talk of another lead singer for the group, but who could make them great like Freddie did?
My thought would be someone like singers from The Darkness or Scissor Sisters.

Peter.

Just so you understand...
I have no problem with Brummies. Unless one visit to the NEC, back in the early 80s, to see the Motor Show classes someone as a Brummy, then I am only speaking the truth...
I am not, nor have I ever lived in Birmingham... the fool is tracing Internet servers and main gateways, rather than a person.

> Now perhaps you can be really smart and tell everyone where I am?

If RentaDick does a trace on your IP, which I see is also dynamic, it could be quite funny.

I agree, back in the mid 70's I started studying code, what kept me from obtaining my ham ticket was the way hams treated non hams.

what performs better, your i10k or a beam antenna? (i know your i10k will withstand the stronger winds over most anything out there at the moment.)

thanks!

Hey Jay, agreed the hubs of the PDLII are fragile. IMHO the tuning of those ants is another drawback though when done correctly they operate very well.

You made the claim, the burden of proof is one you.
Touche!! You got me there! I yield!

> I am only too aware of all the orthodox hams >out there!

Which has nothing to do with your original claim.

Ok, Let me rephrase my statement. Perhaps I was hasty in how I tried to convey what I was thinking. I shall try to restate my position.
I am supportive of all those who wish to get a ham license regardless of the class of license they wish to obtain, what they have to learn to get it, how well they actually do on the "test", or whether they are electronics engineers or from CB, bootleggers or otherwise. I recognize that there are those who belittle nocodes, or those who are of a lesser priviledged license class than themselves and certainly cb'ers. Incentive licensing should have never happened IMHO as it seems to create a sort of caste system or mentalilty among at least some (as opposed to "many" HA!) hams. These people make too much noise so perhaps they are attributed with numbers in the "many" catagory. I would like to see "many" cb'ers become hams as I would like to see more activity on bands when they are not open as happens on cb although there is not much choice about that if cb is the only band you operate on. I know many cool openings are missed as usually no one is much on the bands that are not open. I don't care if they still use cb or not once licensed. It is all a hobby not a religion, or a way of life, so there should be a lot of latitude given to those who participate. My roots are in cb radio and I had a fairly short but good time there and still have 6 close friends that went to ham radio more or less when I did in 1970. I can lookup alls for about a dozen cb'ers from the late 60's that also became hams that I just haven't kept in touch with. Three of us used to have callsigns that were sequential which was fun for a while. There are certainly some aspects of cb operating that SHOULD be imported to ham radio. You will have better luck getting travel info on cb than a 2 meter repeater!! Cb has it all over ham radio for local mobile operating mostly due to numbers of mobile operators. You can't find out what the traffic jam is all about on a 2 meter repeater very often, or what freeway conditions are like before you decide to jump on the interstate. I could go on but will save you from more of my rambling!

>Soon the code will be dropped and it will be >easy to get a license.

It's easy to get a license now.

>...Compared to when I got my (had them all) >licenses it sure as hell is!! Try taking them in >an FCC office when you know the engineer in >charge has had complaints in the past about >you bootlegging on CB!

Ha! That had to chap his ass.
Perhaps but I think he was glad! We were out of his hair really. my other two buddies had been called by him (his name was Deitz) and he suggested that they get ham licenses and why they should. He never called me! What was I?? Chopped Liver?? Scared one of them to death with that call! He got rid of his cb (Midland 13-880), amp (Hygain(?) Afterburner) and took the antenna down. He sure learned the code fast!!

> I am not by any means anti-cw. I just do not

The same goes for ham licensure, period.
True story!

>Nor do I think CW will die away.

Nor do I.

>I do not find it to be either a reliable or valid

>indicator of overall proficiency in ham radio.

Well, an indicator of advancement in the hobby is most certainly code.
I was thinking more in terms of just being sort of forced to learn it.

>Perhaps you think it would be best to have a >typing test as an element for ham tests?

Nah!
GOOD! I can't type worth a dang!

Because digital modes and apparatus isn't as fascinating to the dx-loving oldtimers compared to simply doing it yourself with nothing but the rig, the antenna, sky, and mother nature.
Touche!

The glass is half empty from your perspective, half full from mine.
There is no argument or contention among anyone that amateur radio declined when the nocode ticket was introduced.

Not sure I understand that one correctly

>Myself and several friends are sufficient proof

>of that!

The increased number of actions taken by the FCC against nocodes compared to the number of actions taken against other class of licenses is proof of the decline, not your personal experiences.
Not sure if it proves a decline. Could it be that there is a larger influx of new no code hams and the actions taken against them is proportionate to what it was before?
I was just saying that Morse itself does not prevent cb'ers or anyone else from becoming a ham, it is more their state of mind about spending the time and effort to get it down that gets in the way.

> It is clearly the mindset of the learner that >prevents them learning it and getting a

Yet others regard it as the foundation. Considering SOS is universal, code can get through when no other communication will, even if one must bang on an object. Extremely helpful in dire emergencies.

Yes they do, but not sure they should.

> "Many" only means a large number,

Fair enough. The matter is, there have been no reg contributors to this group who have spoken against or try and prevented a cb'er from obtaining a license. expressing a personal opinion of why an individual chooses not to get licensed is not the same as speaking against another who chooses to do so.

Likely the case, I am not a regular here so will yield to your knowledge of that.
Of course this is rec.radio cb so I would imagine most here have some positive interest in cb so I would think that there would not be a whole lot of posts that are negative about cb or do cb bashing.
Your points are well taken, I like your style, you speak your mind! You challenged me to support my position or surrender it. I tried to meet you halfway and revise it anyway!
You present things well, and I gotta think about it because of it. I could talk to you for hours on the radio about this stuff! I sure never spent this much time on QRZ.com getting involved in a discussion!! See ya in the pileups!

Yeah I had a problem tuning them also, no matter where I placed the Gamma Match Rod adjustments, it seemed to have a mind of its own. The Gamma Matches biting me again.

Thats why the Gamma Matches will be lost for the Moonraker 6 rebuild.

But after all that, yes it is a very impressive beam a antenna.

Hello Buther Boy:

The beam antenna should out perform the Interceptor 10K 5/8 wavelength ground plane antenna. If the beam is designed and built right.

But not all beams are. Money is well spent in the proper feeding and matching of any antenna. Which is not always the mass produced, manufactured low cost way.

Having a beam antenna with a low cost and lossy feed system, is like Nascar with a one barrel carburetor on it. It will look good and make some noise but get easily beat.

Maybe not, maybe the 4CX800 tubes Pi vs G1v curve maynot need a step up transformer. I have not looked at it,ascompared to the 4CX250 tube.

Yes it would. But I would want the capibility to use both type of radios, low and high drive.

Have you got any spectrum measuremnents on that? I would love to see that. But I know most are driving the Pride amps to 500 and more output. And the power supply is handling it. I know the power transformer is rated at 1800V at 500Ma. Good for over 700 watts out.

Agreed, but all new componets would have to be used. A friend down the road a ways has modified his Pride 300 using a 8930 Tube, which is a military spec'ed 4cx250R Tube, and installed a larger blower. Neat-O

Just look at those previous forge posts the gutless whinebaby put on this group! His frustration at being outed in all his lying baloney shows BIGTIME now. He can't take it and has to disguse and forge because he KNOWS how owned he is. Yuk Yuk, mopathetic...you obey well. When commanded you unfailingly do as you are told! LOL! Geez, it is so much fun to have a bitch to order around!

We push his buttons and he explodes in vitriol. AKC's complete mastery of this queenboi is so fun to see in action. This must be what the first guy with a remote control TV felt like!

steve zero productions announces the greatest movie ever made about ww2. Starring an all keyclown cast, who play roles of American soldiers that operated ham radios illegally before the war. The keyclowns portray their fathers and grandfathers as they fight their way through Europe to meet up with German keyclown operators and start "piece" negotiations. The truckstop and Venereal disease ward scenes will make you laugh out loud, as these keyclowns show the cost of fighting to meet with the German keyclowns. The scenes where the keyclowns capture enemy keyclowns at rifle point as they order "PANTS DOWN!" are also unforgettable!

Don't miss the epic production of "SAVING RYAN'S PRIVATES" Coming to a gay porn theater near you!

PRE RELEASE REVIEWS:

"mopeythetic shows his versatility when seducing the french!"
-Gene Sicksel, Women's Wear Monthly

"landshark is flamingly unforgettable as the keyclown German General"
-twitlips, Sporadic Waves

"The hospital scenes, with the wrist flipping injuries and the sore booties graphically portray the cost of keyclownism" -Scottiekins, NAMBLA WEEKLY

Now mopathetic, post some more stuff. Come on, post all over the place, post 1000 times...OBEY your MASTERS, moparholic at hotmail dot com...OBEY!!!

Was it the Lord of the rings? (Have to be a Brummy to know that hey) > -Have you ever eaten a Cadbury's Chocolate?

Only Brummies eat chocolate now... hmmmm. I thought it was for sale everywhere in the UK including most of the Civilised World. Now if youd have said where is Cadbury World id have said Birmingham. Pklease note though its Cadbury not Cadbury's.

It is in the west midlands, Junction 6 of the M6

Umm..... errr..... Victoria Road

It is a Chicken dish invented by Asians living in the Birmingham area and they are cracking grommit (The Balti's not the Asians).

Royal Sutton Coldfield. My father in law used to work there on security. Dont call anyone from Sutton Coldfield a Brummy, its like calling someone from Croyden a Cockney....

They played a Darkness video on Headbangers Ball one night. I couldn't hit the mute button fast enough.

Hey Doug, I can't keep up this charade. I love you, but you keep using me in

You have a DC source of 12 volts. This is attached to a series circuit of two resistors, one is 8 ohms, the other is 5 ohms.

What is the total power consumed by the circuit?

What is the voltage across the 5 ohm resistor?

How much current flows through each resistor?

Answers on Monday night.

Mabelthorpe and Skeggy are the usual day-trip destinations around here. In fact a large number from here went to Skeggy by coach earlier this year.
If a trip is planned next year, will you still be there... worth meeting up?

Last time I was out that way, there was a motor spares shop that sold CB equipment... is that still the case? If so, I would like to add them to the database.
I was also speaking to some CB users who named one of my local clubs, saying they have managed contact with a few members... do you get any DX from inland on these hills?

Indiscretions? I suppose that is one way to put it.

We in the UK have lowered our standards somewhat since then. Cheating at game shows, in an attempt to get &#65533;1000000, wrecking your political career with a spell in jail or simply claiming to have had an affair with a famous person will get you celebrity status now.
For such amazing achievements, you get invited on to "celebrity" shows, where you are allowed to "pleasure" a pig on live TV.

Peter.

You already know that, unlike you, I do not live on the Internet, yet you only give less than 4 hours for a reply. This is a newsgroup, not a chat room, and some of us have a life.

Graham, being from Birmingham, admits to being a Brummy. I, on the other hand, having absolutely no links with that part of the UK, will not lie just to go easy on your ego.
You cocked up, learn to live with it.

that you cannot even look up the correct IP number.

From what I see on the TV, and from what was witnessed by a local person

Wrong again, I don't like pasties.

He is not to blame for everything, only his own mistakes. And as we all make mistakes, Blair must have made some too.
Probably nothing as stupid as trying to ping a computer when it is not on the Internet, but mistakes just the same.

> -worked for Marks & Spencer as a van driver

Never worked for M&S.
Never worked as a van driver.

Seems like all your "data" is about as reliable as your attempts to trace a computer. Maybe you should tell us what software it is that claims to tell you a person's birth place, job and food preferences. I guess you got it the same place as your incredible tracking software. I do hope you didn't part with any money for such dodgy software and information.

OK, let's take this slowly for you...

A very common boy's name. So popular, even a member of the Royal family has that name.
Hardly a smoking gun, huh?

> Date: 1996/06/05
I was not even on the Internet in 1996.
I have just come across the receipt for my first Modem, a 56K internal, which I used to get on the Internet for the first time... 23rd February 2001.
At £25, it cost more than the rest of the system (bought as a pile of parts).

> Message-ID: <4p4tor$cam@newgate.dircon.co.uk>#1/1 Wrong server, nothing to do with me.

> organization: Direct Connection
Never heard of them, nothing to do with me.

I could have seen your attempt as an attempt at humour, but for recent events...
"His computer was used to access adoption sites... proof he molests children."
"His computer was used to access legal porn involving (very) mature females... proof he likes little boys."
"He has WMDs, we must invade now."
"His name is Peter, so he must be the author of any message by someone called Peter."

Seems you are not the only American "detective" who thinks anything will pass as evidence. No wonder Americans believe the police need some old lady, old fart of a doctor or priest to go around solving crimes for them.

Not being in to such things, I would not have known this one until you gave an answer. I am not really into reading fiction.
However, Lord Of The Rings is quite famous even in America, it would seem. So, not much of a test.

I have been. I would guess that it is the most popular make of chocolate in every part of England.

I know who George Best is... does that make me Irish?
I also know who Ryan Giggs is, so maybe I am Welsh too.
I also know who Sir Alex Ferguson is. Does that make me from Manchester or Scotland... maybe both.

Does Nigel Mansell have some link to Birmingham?

I know of two places called Aston... neither are big enough to have an "Expressway".

Grommit? Is that not a dog?
Sounds more like something found in a Chinese :~)

Strange you should say that about incorrectly being called a Cockney.

Do they not have stores across the whole country?
There used to be a joke about that M&S brand that went around the schools, did it reach your area?

How about the song...
"He jumped from 20,000 feet without a parachute"

There was one song I wished I could remember about the spaghetti covered in cheese. I can only remember part of it.

I deny living there because I do not live in Birmingham. It really is that simple.
I have never, in my whole life, lived anywhere in the Western half of England.

> Ive posted a few times in here quite openly that im from Skegness at the

I did a trace on your IP (or one of them)...

81.79.165.39:1133708339 = user-1319.l2.c4.dsl.pol.co.uk = 52.466667, -1.916667, 250

As the numbers above suggest, the map pointed out Birmingham. Not far out, only the wrong side of the country.
Maybe this is one of those, like Georgie has, that shows where the sender was born... Hahahahaha.

Peter.

Personally i cant stand the Darkness. All the hype around when they first hit the charts made me feel something special was about to happen... and... pfttttt..... it was like a waterlogged firework. Mediocre at best but one of the best rock acts... purleasssssseee... dont insult Rocks memory (aimed at those who think they are Great). Not just me thinking this, ave a butchers.. http://www.acdcpower.net/phorum/phorum/read.php?f=1&i=76720&t=76720

Also it's very rare to replace such an Icon of rock and obtain the same success. As far as i can recall it only happened the once and that was with AC/DC. When Bon Scott popped his mortal coils, which is now 25 years ago Brian Johnson more than adequately filled his shoes and the band is still going today.... For those about to rock.....

Hello Magnum:

The RDF (Radio Direction Finding radio) was a blessed tool in the days before GPS in small boats.

My Dad use to chase after the Albacore Tuna, in the 60's and 70's in a small 22 foot boat. Many times where several miles off the coast. And many times I would see him take bearings off his Bendix RDF to check his position, and figure fuel quantity vs range stuff.

Yeah we had a compass all right but the RDF was used the most. One could take a bearing off the noise that a city like San diego or Los Angles would generate. The neat thing about taking a RDF bearing during the night is that many times we where close enough to shore to see the light reflecting off the atmosphere, or the light bending over the horizon, verifying the RFD bearing was a good.

I have the old Bendix RDF today, that I use to RDF noise down from our local power company noise generating power grid system. I use to have the kid drive around in the truck and me setting on the tail gate taking RDF cuts. Usually took a few circles around the neighborhood to find the offending power pole.

I see those Ray Jeffs at the flea market quite often. Twenty bucks is tops. They are not very good for DFing. There was one novelty Ray Jeff that had a tracking motor in it, not that it worked well either. The problem is the null in a Ray Jeff is really shitty.

Sounds like an interesting device. I can see its usefulness, as far as positioning offensive breakers I hadn't considered that but now you mention it I can. We used to play a game with the larger CB club in our area in the really early 80's called "Fritz von nastys" where a member of the opposing club would kidnap someone and then transmit for 1 min every 10 mins for us to try to track them down. We used positioning of vehicles and poundage checks with maps and two of us actually had DF loops and it was a hell of a lot of fun. I could see that device being useful for that too. Shame that it has disappeared because it bought people closer together in a friendly working atmosphere. Breakers these days just don't get involved with things like that anymore. Well that's how it is in England anyhows.

Cheers Jay,
Graham

Hello, Chuck

First of all, "rec.radio.amateur" isn't a group; there has to be another word on the end. You can find it in your newsgroups if you search for "rec.radio.amateur" and you'll find such things as "rec.radio.amateur.policy", "rec.radio.amateur.misc" and many others.

If you wish to upgrade, you may or may not be out of luck. You must have proof of passing the Morse code test at 5 words per minute (or higher). This would require an old (before 1987, I believe) technician license which required 5 words per minute plus the general theory, or an old novice, general, advanced, or extra class license. I'm not too sure about the tech + (tech plus 5 words per minute).

Obviously, you can renew your ticket in 2 years and can continue to use it now.

If you wish, check out this URL:
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/HamRadioHelpGroup/

You'll find a lot of folks willing to share information with you and they have had some give-aways of study material.

Best regards from Rochester, NY
Jim

Hello, Mopar

Danged if I didn't stumble across about 3 posts that were actually made by you and not some numbskull trying to come across as you .... :))

Winter has set in here. Low 20s. My buddy, VE7DGL, has temps currently around 30 below. 'course he is nearly halfway between the U.S. boarder and the N.W. Territories :))

Last year, he hit more that 50 below (Centigrade! That was more than 60 below zero in Fahrenheit!!!).

Best regards from Rochester, NY
Jim

N8WWM mewled anonther idle threat with:

Hey Peepeeholic:
Yes I am in Toledo. I have plenty of down home hospitality for you or ANY of the other queens in here who wish to stir up some mess.
You wanna come by and visit? I will be delighted to send you back to the MISTAKE ON THE LAKE with a thought in your mind that it was a real dumb idea.
Imagine, Peepeeholic...Imagine...You come to my place and star some junk...I put you face down and hurtin extreme, take pics of you laying there with a bumped up noggin, and post 'em to the NG. I relish you coming by. I am good in the callbook, just as I told your wife, the

Have not had this much fun since I used to go cuttin' coax and building jamming oscillators back when I was 16 yrs old.

When I went to your section eight dump, you were way yonder too cowardly to come outside, as seen below, so I took -YOUR- pic instead. lol

Indeed. The "Con" part of "Con Man" means confidence. Steve has yet to impart any feeling of confidence in any of his stories and claims.

Yep. The Air Force always loads support pers on aircraft to engage the enemy. I recall a time when the entire line of breakfast cooks ...., then there was the time they guys from military pay ....

Poor Con Man indeed. Hope he doesn't give up his day job.

There is no shame in being Reserves (or Guard). America needs all of it's service people. All have a role. Then there are those who served "in other ways" or who have "real military service" without having been in the service at all. Lots of people with lots of issues on RRAP.

Even if you were to state "all of the junk out there" it would not be a mutually inclusive statement. It would not include all radios, just all radios that are "junk" how you define junk would be the problem! There are some really well built 40 channel rigs like Tram, SBE to name a few. SBE had a couple early 40 channel "cooker dial" radios not sure who else. That is a lot of little bitty channel numbers on a dial!!! I do not recall any 23 channel radios with LED displays but there may have been some. There were several early 23 channel radios with what used to be called 22a and 22b channels in them. You often had to carefully turn the dial between ch. 22 and 23 to catch the spot on the rotary switch to be there. For a time, there was a PA spot between ch 22 and 23. This was to disable the in between channels by giving the switch spot something else to do. 24 position rotary switches were commonly available so were used instead of a 23 position switch early on at least. I think the Lafayette 525 and Courier 23 were a couple of them. In the mid seventies every one wanted apiece of the CB craze action and jumped in. Quality took an overall big dive in the industry. I never had anyone complain about the Cobra radios The 19, 21 and 29 were very good radios if not the best in their price range. Around here in the Seattle area there is not much activity on CB. In the evening there are a bunch of ops on channel 8 (who mostly argue and threaten each other) and that is about it. There is some scattered activity on occassion but the regulars are all on ch. 8. Pretty sad compared to the amount of activity on the late sixties! There were large groups on several channels back then depending on the area you were in and operating interests. It was very rich in "CB culture" back then. The only Cb I still have is a Lafayette 625 mobile radio. It has a REAL receiver in it. Good filtering, good adjacent channel rejection. The 23 channel radios are just fun and memorable to me. I would like a Courier Royale or a Tram Titan 2 if I were to become active on CB again.

Dang, that's colder than the proverbial well diggers ass! I just got home from snow plowing about an hour ago, we got about five inches on this latest blast. I may have my snow plowing business sold. (waiting on the dood to get his financing together) I'll still do a few rural gravel driveways out here in the sticks even if I sell tho. I'm tired of doing parking lots so I'm selling damn near everything except one plow truck.

The better half and I may head up to the Niagara Falls casino next week for a couple days as a get away...gotta watch the weather first. :)

Indeed. All he has to do is digitize and make available his DD-214 (blotting out privacy entries such as SSN if he is worried) and that would end most of the speculation.

Dudly the Imposter hasn't been able to do that in seven years.

By now he ought to be feeling a "seven year itch" but perhaps he has no nerves...

There's only two conclusions:

1. Dud doesn't have a DD-214 because he never served.

2. Dud served but doesn't want anyone to know of the REAL truth on that form...truth that would put an end to all his Lying in here.

I'm thinking of getting one of these for a cross-country road trip.
What's the difference between these two besides the Road Trip coming with an exterior mount antenna? Any other handheld CB recommendations?

Thanks,
Josh

There was a shop on the Roman Bank in Skeggy and there was a shop at the back of the St Clements school (used to be the Morris School/Earl of Scarborough) but sadly these no longer exsist. I dont know of any elsewhere around here.

A lot of people knock CB's normally when they are really close together and they get broadband on them. This doesnt happen so much now for obvious reasons so people see some middle of the road rigs as pretty good. Some people slate other CBs because they dont have one of that type themselves so they just parrot what someone else says... sometimes its true, mostly not. The Cobra 25's and 29's have come in for some stick recently but apart from the soundtracker i dont see whats wrong with them. Apart from the lack of SSB ;o)

Gamma Matches are a very excellent means of matching 50 Ohm unbalanced feed to a balanced feed antenna of lower feed impedance than that of the feed transmision line.

Most difficulty with gamma matches comes when the feed point is below 1/4 lambda above ground. Ground and other reflections tend to alter the feed point impedance and makes matching more difficult. Most difficulty comes due to heigth above ground for the feed point and the inability of the driven element being adjustable.

Depending on heigth of the feedpoint, the driven element and the gamma match need itterative adjustments so that an acceptable match is acheived.

I posted mine voluntarily, but I certainly wasn't the first. Even John Kerry posted his military records during the 2004 campaign. Major Dud, OTOH, can't seem scrape up the pocket change for a second-hand scanner at the local Goodwill store.

<snip>
>>> Frank and I disagree on Dudly. I say Dud was NEVER IN. Frank >>> says he was in but as a Reservist.

A couple weeks ago I realized that you're probably right -- Major Dud was never in the USMC. Maybe he was the Steven Robeson that served in the USCG (Semper Paratus), but I doubt that, too. Dud was most likely a brat that was tied to his momma's apron strings until his 30's, when some financial crisis forced him to get a job (his mommy retired and her Social Security check wasn't enough to pay for his hobbies). And instead of admitting that he wasted his early adulthood, he assumed the identity and military history of someone with the same name who he discovered while surfing the net. That's my take. It may not be 100% accurate, but I'll bet it's pretty close.

We'll never know which because Dud is too much of a coward to post the truth. And by 'coward' I mean he's a yellow, spineless, shit-talking, tail-tucking, hide-behind-the-keyboard blowhard......

I have no fear at all disclosing my military record. I don't care if people know that I was a BE but now work at a bartender (which I actually like better than being a BE). I'm not rich or famous -- never have been and never will be. I'm no hero (wannabe or not) and I'm not afraid to admit that I would rather walk away from a fight than take a chance at getting my ass kicked. But Major Dud, self-proclaimed war hero and saver of lives, can't scarf enough valium to post his DD-214?

That's pure =-COWARDICE-=.

<snip>
> If and when I address anything to Major Dud, I will toss in the > usual ending motto for all USMC Wannabes: Temper Fry.

That won't have any effect. Dud lives in his own little fantasy world where he is morally superior and everyone else should worship him, yet at the same time he seeks validation of those fantasies by engaging in flame wars on Usenet. IOW, you can't hurt his delusions of persecution by feeding them. What Dudly fears most is the truth, and that's how he will go down -- in a fireball of facts:

Fact: Dudly didn't know which targets were used in boot camp.

Fact: Dudly didn't know that avionics techs are routinely assigned to the FMF.

Fact: Dudly has claimed to have several DD-214's -and also- has claimed to have only one.

Fact: Dudly didn't know what info is recorded on a DD-214.

Fact: Dudly fell into the "box 24" trap.

Fact: Dudly fell into the shore patrol / military police trap.

Fact: Dudly didn't know some routine USMC terminology.

Fact: Dudly didn't know what page of the SRB is used to record crimes and punishments (after claiming to have witnessed several NJP's... he probably doesn't even know what 'NJP' stands for).

Fact: Dudly didn't know the different types of military discharges.

Fact: Dudly didn't know the promotion process for the USMC.

Fact: Dudly didn't know about the VINSON system; that the system was in service for a large part of his alleged service; and that the crypto system which he claimed was the -only- crypto system on USMC aircraft during his alleged 'career' was retired ten years before his discharge/separation.

And here's the biggie:

Fact: Dudly has proved that he is more than willing to provide proof of any claim -- if he has it!!!

Tsk, Dud could go to any Kinko's, Office Depot, Office Max store and get his DD-214 scanned. I'm sure the Hospital where he says he works has a scanner someplace that would do it for free...

I can go for the USCG part. Years ago Dud made a big thing of his father's death (father was a ham) for a long time and said his father had been in the USN, "taught him the code" etc., was "his mentor." OK, a little bit of that was fine, but Dudly dragged it out in here.

Dud has never mentioned his mother. Dud doesn't talk much of his first marriage, either. <shrug>

But, the interesting part is that this alleged E-7 changed from an "avionics tech" to nursing just doesn't wash well. Especially when Dud was so macho gung-ho about being a "warrior." [see online pipedreaming about "doing HALO drops" and other heroic battle things] Now it DOES fit that Dud - as a former CG pharmacist's mate - COULD make a transition from military pill dispensing to being a civilian nurse.

Not a problem on finding those with similar names. I went looking for others with MY name and - surprisingly - found that a Major Leonard Anderson, USMC, was one of the pilots in the Blue Angels!
How about that, a Marine (real) Major in a precision aerobatic team! :-)

Back when I was taking Basic Training at Camp Gordon (it wasn't renamed as a Fort yet), the First Sergeant told me to report to the JAG office there, but didn't know any more about it than I.
I did, showed all my ID there, got puzzled looks, showed my dog tags too. Seems a black guy in the previous group of trainees was also named Leonard Anderson and had lost his ID card, had applied for a new one. I had mine, so no problem.
I went back to Basic Company 7 to the grins of the First Soldier and a couple clerks (JAG had called them to verify the same name in two different groups). :-)

I doubt he qualified on the range. Does the USCG make recruits qualify in weapons in boot camp? [I never knew]

If he had to go to sea, it would have been the last of him.

None of which we have seen.

>Fact: Dudly didn't know what info is recorded on a DD-214.

That Separation form has been out and used by all branches for over a half century. Very few changes in it over that time.
Each block has a short description of what should go in there on the form itself.

>Fact: Dudly fell into the "box 24" trap.

Actually, anyone could if they didn't have one to look at. :-)

>Fact: Dudly fell into the shore patrol / military police trap.

Interesting. It's a very clear distinction to anyone who's been IN the military and been near another branch.

>Fact: Dudly didn't know some routine USMC terminology.

That's surprising, given the popularity of military shows on TV. :-)

>Fact: Dudly didn't know what page of the SRB is used to record crimes

Heh. Well, "SRB" to me is the acronym for the strap-on booster rockets of the space shuttle. :-)

>Fact: Dudly didn't know the different types of military discharges.

He probably made his own "discharge" dreaming of his military heroism. :-)

>Fact: Dudly didn't know the promotion process for the USMC.

Very surprising. All of those who stayed in longer than their first hitch would be VERY cognizant of the rank and promotion system in every military branch.

In retrospect, that was just bluff on his part. He just doesn't know dink about military avionics, period. He's never mentioned one single familiar name or nomenclature of any avionics he ever laid hands on...for seven years... until last week when Hans tromped on his "Juliett" claim.
Anyone who takes pride in their radio-electronics work will be willing, even eager, to talk shop on that stuff.

Several years ago, when Dudly was pressed on the matter of names/nomenclature of military electronics, he tried to bluff his way out with some blabbering about "secrecy" and "not wanting to reveal military secrets." Total bullshit that was since the names and nomenclatures have been in public distribution for years in the DoD and GAO...along with the makers and the contract amounts. That includes crypto gear that was out in the field. I used to subscribe to the free trade magazine "Defense Electronics" for months and in that each month was a column of names/numbers/awards/makers/etc.
so that those in the industry could tell who got what. I even posted a link for anyone to get the "catalog" of Signal Corps communications equipment released in 1994, FM 24-24.
That same link has been posted on at least three other amateur radio websites before I wrote it in here. [it's from the Army's TRADOC or Training and Doctrine Command

"digital library"] All the operating specs are in there.

>And here's the biggie:
>
>Fact: Dudly has proved that he is more than willing to provide proof >of any claim -- if he has it!!!

Yeah, well that's what he says NOW. Back a few years he used to say "the proof is in my wallet" and "I don't have to show it to you!" :-) In other words, all he had in his wallet were starved-dead moths...i.e., NOTHING in the way of proof.

Spineless bullshiting hypocrite is what he is.

Birmingham is at the forefront of new technology, even the crappy suburbs are easily capable of 8MB broadband. Dont blame the Birmingham servers for peoples lack of interest in your posts. Im only answering it because I feel sorry for you.

Funny website BTW, I guess it was worth waiting for. It rings true in many of the CB's i've had to repair. That said, most of these rigs I repaired were from Birmingham..... ahem....

For ease of transport between vehicles, proven quality, durability and performance, nothing beats a Wilson magnetic mount. Go with the 500, 1000, or 5000. It will outlast most of the radios.

No doubt. Jerry Lee Lewis never recovered from the beating the press gave him for his family indiscretions.

>Indiscretions? I suppose that is one way to put >it.

Well, if it isn't against the law (some states have permitted underage marriages with the permission of the child bride's parents, and other states allow for cousins to wed) then it's no one's business and the term "indiscretion" may be overkill. Different reactions to personal behaviors illustrate the contrasts in values across the country. What is readily accepted in many states, such as California, can be shockingly appalling in some midwestern and Bible-belt states.

>We in the UK have lowered our standards >status now.

One of my personal biases is against the sheer number of people who watch such drivel such as reality shows which are usually focused around another's misfortunes. That such a large segment of the country is watching this shit speaks volumes about the the real problem in the US, the dumbing down of of our country and the decline of our US citizens and our education. Unless one tunes into public television or radio, the majority of "news" broadcasts are concerned with who Paris Hilton is fucking, Britney Spears' baby, and shit like this. Turn on morning talk shows and try and find out what happened in Falluja or Baghdad and you're more apt to hear about Nick Lache's solo romp in Vegas or Trump's show where he reigns exalted and supreme, swelling his head watching which contestant can stick their nose up his ass the furthest.

Those who aren't ashamed of this country (in this specific aspect) are either part of the problem or are not paying attention and have no clue what is happening.

>For such amazing achievements, you get

As John Lennon said "I'm just sitting here watching the wheels go round." In this case, the wheels are mowing down a huge portion of US citizens. Kind of hard for those wheels to miss when such a large group are continually hurling themselves under the wheels, eh? Perhaps it's for the best. Natural Selection is usually a good thing.

The glass is half empty from your perspective, half full from mine.
There is no argument or contention among anyone that amateur radio declined when the nocode ticket was introduced.

>Not sure I understand that one correctly

The nocodes don't know what the airwaves were like before they were licensed, simply because they were not present. The majority of ops who were already licensed when the nocodes arrived certainly noticed not only a decline in operator behavior but an increase in FCC enforcements against licensed hams. Coincidence of timing? Methinks not.

>Myself and several friends are sufficient proof

The increased number of actions taken by the FCC against nocodes compared to the number of actions taken against other class of licenses is proof of the decline, not your personal experiences.

The FCC has added no additional enforcement staff, yet enforcement has increased against hams.

Depends what you are getting into ham radio for. As a sailor (civilian) who is in international waters on a weekly basis, I can say cw, more specifically, knowing "S-O-S", is one of the most important attributes a ham licensed seaman can possess.

Considering SOS is universal, code can get

Fair enough. The matter is, there have been no reg contributors to this group who have spoken against or try and prevented a cb'er from obtaining a license. expressing a personal opinion of why an individual chooses not to get licensed is not the same as speaking against another who chooses to do so.

>Likely the case, I am not a regular here so will

I'm not counting the few rotten hams that frequent this group who forge cb'ers and cross-post to other groups in order to try and incite and inflame other hams against cb'ers.

I like a good discussion, too. I like disagreements too, when they are properly presented, as one learns from other folks' mistakes as well as accomplishments. Next time the dx is running down south to the mopathetic, you are a punk. When AKC does something it isn't on your faggy schedule. That extends to other areas of your life as well, like your ole lady's sex life. THAT definitely aint on your time, as you well know. Bow wow wow to that!

You had your chance to come to Dayton, which you did not do. You had your chance to come to Findlay, which you did not do. AKC was at both locations, YOU were the one who wouldn't show. That is because you fear detection and public identification, you punk.

Why don't you shut your hotdog holders? When AKC has something up, you aint gonna know til it is down, you snotty nosed hunk of moldering parrot droppings.

Make all the threats you want, you punk piece of garbage. You have been identified and located. It seems SOME of the keyclowns you think are your gay lovers in this NG do not like what you are doing. Hee hee hee.

Answer the question, rimmer boy...does the mailman stop at the shop and the house, or just the shop?

Quoted from the ARRL Webpage .. you are right about the upgrade:

"STEP 3: Extra Class License (upgrade from General)

* EXAM REQUIREMENT: 50-question Extra Written Exam (Element 4)
* PRIVILEGES: All amateur privileges.
* LICENSE STUDY MATERIALS

General licensees may upgrade to Extra Class by passing a 50-question multiple-choice examination. No further Morse code test is required. In addition to some of the more obscure regulations, the test covers specialized operating practices, advanced electronics theory, and radio equipment design. Frankly, the test is very difficult, but others have passed it, and you can too. Non-licensed individuals must pass Element 1 Morse Code Exam and Element 2, Element 3 and Element 4 Written Exams to earn an Extra License. The FCC grants exam element 1 and/or element 3 credit to individuals that previously held an old Novice or an old Technician license. Valid Forms of Examination Element Credit can be found on the Web.

The HF bands can be awfully crowded, particularly at the top of the solar cycle. Once one earns HF privileges, one may quickly yearn for more room. The Extra Class license is the answer. Extra Class licensees are authorized to operate on all frequencies allocated to the Amateur Service.

Amateur Radio is a friendly, high-tech hobby that's got something fun for everyone! "

For ease of transport between vehicles, proven quality, durability and performance, nothing beats a Wilson magnetic mount. Go with the 500, 1000, or 5000. It will outlast most of the radios.

I would also opt for the cobra 29 in addition to the Wilson. No point in having the freeband channels if your not going to use them. And the 29 costs less and has a long standing history of being a quality built radio.

Certainly not, he speaks for (and to) himself.

However, having heard the reports of the Jackson trial, I have to wonder about police abusing their position. The "evidence" seemed to be ridiculous. Although I have no interest in porn and believe the Internet would be better without it, the use of those sites is surely not illegal. If the police are going to say that using any kind of porn site makes you a child abuser, then many people had better watch their backs. Considering that they tried suggesting that using an adoption site makes you a child abuser, they could apply this to anyone using any site involving children in any way.

If their "evidence" was accepted, all it would take is for someone to accuse a person and the police would be using all kinds of innocent Internet use against them. If your child goes on some children's TV site, that would be used as proof against you.

But this is not just an American thing, I also think that putting several bullets in a man's head simply on the evidence that:
"He was running",
or
"He had a coat on"
or, when the above are found to have been incorrect,
"He had mongolian eyes" is even worse. What they did to Jacko may have cost both Jacko and the American people millions, but some Brazillian has lost his life and a family seem unable to get real answers.

Everyone makes mistakes but, in some cases, it seems that police decide someone is guilty then set about making the evidence point that way.

Regards,

Peter.

Running him down?
Aliases?

I simply said that, being a human, he makes mistakes. That is not "running down" a person. I have been known as Brainbuster from the day I came on the Internet, back in 2001, and Peter is my real name. You, on the other hand, use many names and accounts, Google to hide behind, and even post with nothing more than some meaningless Email address as your name.

> You seem to forget, you were caught and traced to World Online > and Tele2 hubs out of Birmingham UK,

You seem to forget that those are simply ISP servers, not my computer.

These company's servers are open to use by ANYONE, ANYWHERE in the UK. You do not have to live in Birmingham, and you do not need to have links with M&S. As I do not own any Internet servers or ISPs, where they locate their offices and servers is NOT under my control.

From the day I came on the Internet, I have ALWAYS had a dynamic IP.

Innocent until proven guilty.
The only link you have shown is that some other person has the name Peter. Wow, amazing work, shock news... someone has the name Peter.

I do not have to prove that I am telling the truth. You, as the accuser, must prove that you are not simply full of shyte. So far, you have simply shown that you are full of the brown and smelly.

Having been reported on International TV and the Internet, it is all a matter of public knowledge.

To be honest, the "evidence" put forward was the kind of stuff you would expect to see in some comedy sketch show.
I was expecting them to suddenly burst into song...
"Spam, Spam, Spam... wonderful Spaaaam"
How much did that trial cost the public? If anyone was "taking the mickey", it was the police.

Look at the posts to this group, it has often been commented that I can take time to reply to a message. Even Graham has commented on it, only a short time back.
Everyone on the group knows that, unlike you, I do not sit about waiting for messages so that I can have someone to talk to. Anyone who has been here for some time will also know that, as I have children, time at the weekend is spent with them.

> You did not always have a dynamic IP, Peter,

Prove it.

From the day I came on the Internet, as now, I was on dial-up. That system involves the ISP allocating ONE connection for a number of customers. As the ISPs have to rent the modems from the telephone provider, at quite a high price, they cannot afford to allocate one to a single customer.

> and it was only after you were caught and traced to a Birmingham provider

The server belongs to, and is controlled by the provider. I have no control over the server or the IP it gives to me when I connect.

If you believe otherwise, prove it.

IIRC, I was coming in on the main road having come from Mabelthorpe and it was a motor spares shop on my right. They sold some CB equipment.
Last time I was out that way, it was a coach trip and my children were with me, so I didn't wonder far from the beach.

I was referring to people on the hills here, getting through to you out there. Maybe, when the

Some people expect too much, or have faulty memory... some notion that a certain CB could stop interference from next door.
Yeah, right.
When you get that close, there is nothing you can do. However, due all the over modulating and the poor receivers of the 80s, some situations could have been avoided.
If people had of known what they were like, would they have paid good money for a Fidelity Doorstop Special? Last one I had, I gutted it and used it to build a microphone tester in.
As you seem to like the small Stalker and President type radios, I'll spare you the pain of knowing what I did to the last one that met my bench.

Peter.

His post had me in fits of laughter.

High tech software, high level encryption, remailers, bouncing messages between servers in different countries, selecting your own IP and cover stories to hide identity.
It reads like some spoof spy film, but the best of all... all this for, as he claims, a "poorly paid M&S vannie from Birmingham".

It's friggin hilarious. He is either one helluva comedian or, if he really believes his own stories, a very sick person. He is either telling jokes, or he is a joke.
I do so hope that I am not laughing at some poor sod's affliction, but it really is the stuff of TV comedy shows.

Regards,

Peter.

Simple as that... Entanet.
They are the company who my ISP use to provide the servers for the Email, newsgroups and Web site. No remailer - direct from this computer, through a Freeola Dial-up Modem, to Enternet.

Look again at the path...

> Path: g2news1.google.com!news4.google.com!news.glorb.com
> !molokai.public-internet.co.uk!newspeer.public-internet.co.uk
> !caladan!entanet!62.249.253.78

From the Enternet server, through whatever path is necessary, to g2news1.google.com.
No remailer.

> to allow you 3 levels of encryption,

3 Levels of encryption? Who the hell do you think I am... James f'king Bond???

> and while your IP

It is NOT my IP. It was assigned to me for a short period, and ceased to have any links to me to as soon as I disconnected... immediately after sending mail.

> "appears" to trace to Nyk&#65533;bing Mors, Denmark > to Amsterdam, and then to London

Yeah, right... wait until the drugs wear off and try again.

You need to remember that, apart from the final destination, all the listed servers are simply a way of getting from A to B. Someone pinging from another location may get a totally different path.
As for the final link, the one that the IP refers to, that is simply the location of the service provider's servers. If my ISP decided to take my message through the London Enternet servers, that's nothing to do with me.

I am NOT the only Peter in the World. That message, if it was even genuine, was posted before I even got on the Internet. So, clearly, one of the millions of other Peters in the World.

> -your refusal to answer the 'Birmingham' questions I gave you

I didn't refuse, as I made clear.
It was pointless for many reasons:
1. Graham had already answered them, so answers were there to be seen.
2. They were general knowledge questions, not only known to Brummies.
(If only Brummies know the answers then you must be a Brummy.)
3. We are all on the Internet... anyone can Google Search for the answers.
4. You asked those same questions a few years back, and I gave you answers to the ones I knew.
5. If I do not know the answers, you will simply say I am lying so that you can remain in your dream world.
6. In your sick mind, you are convinced of your own silly story and will never accept the truth. You wouldn't recognise the truth if it kicked you in the nads.

> -your published dislike of Blair

Prove it, where do I display any knowledge of their employee policies?
Prove that M&S only exist in Birmingham.
Prove that their only jobs are driving vans.

> you admit to living in Brum, driving a van, etc

Prove it.

You need to keep taking the medication, it should kick in at some point. And stop watching the spy movies, they are warping your mind.

Stay away from the Cobra. The Uniden is a good unit. They have a model like that one, without the weather channels. Weather channels are a waste.

Not noticed anyone in Skeg selling CB's apart from a few "on air" offers once in a while. I think that place you refer to must have been a few years

Its impossible that close but either end of a road unless power was being pushed should not cause undue problems to a reasonably good filtered rig. It might cause the signal meter to drop a little but other than that no worries. There was a girl in the next street who used to own a planet 2000. When I came on air (oooh err matron) she said she might as well come onto the same chanel as me and listen because I wiped her signal out. When i sold her a Rotel 220 her problems , as far as that goes, was over. Her only other problem was I wouldn't go out with her... lol.
Do you remember the York 867's and Binatone Route 66's... my god they were Cr_p.......

I dont prefer them Pete, the reason why i mentioned the President AR7 was because they ran off the TC9106 PLL which piggy backs on the uniden type TC9119 (UK FM) chips so id buy one for a fiver and use the PLL to piggy back a legal FM rig to give 80ch and id have plenty of bits for spare parts. I always liked the Rotel 240's, york 863's, binatone 5 stars and the like because they were good and easy to repair/adapt. I remember stripping out an ICOM straight 40 radio and fiting an echo chamber inside it. Made the display show EC when it was on and had depth and volume knobs and a gain control on it. Pretty good it was too especially as it was based on an old Bremi type (same original box as the robo voice) swapped it for a Rotel RVC 240 in the end which was mint in the box.

Anyone have any interest in a Classic Lafayette hand-held, single channel, CB, Model HE-29A? Unit is in very good condition, full antenna (only a slight bend on the very top, last section), original leather case (In fair to good condition). Unit is untested as of this posting (will be testing at a later date,) but with the shape it's in, I'd guess that it works. No pictures available at the moment...

Check this image for an idea of what it looks like. It's the unit in the middle...

K1MAN ESSAY - ES051202 -

Blood is Thicker Than Water

America is all of us. If you come from another country and/or another culture, you are welcome by me as we offer you citizenship and the protections of our precious Constitution. Those of us who were born here, however, are willing, by definition, to die in the protection of our precious birth land and our precious Constitution.

Even though America is all of us, and it is, we will not allow you to do some quite important things such as being our President if you were not born here. There is a damn good reason for this. If push comes to shove, we are afraid you might "cut and run." I say "might." We simply don't want to take this chance, however slight it may be.

In that sense, therefore, those who are not born in America are "second class" Americans.

Same deal in Maine. If you were not born in Maine, you are not a Mainer. I "deal" with that. Mainers do cut me SOME slack, however, since I have been a citizen of Maine for 48 years. SOME slack, not very much. That is just how it is, blood is thicker than water.

America is predominantly Christian, and we do, indeed, have a national Christmas tree. That is just how it is, blood is thicker than water. In this case, we are remembering the holy birth of Jesus and the blood many of us believe he shed for all of us. That is just how it is, blood is thicker than water.

English is the predominant language in America. Some day there well might be more Spanish speaking Americans born here than English speaking Americans born here. There might well be more "African Americans" born here that "whites" born here. Hey man, this is America; I just love being American!

When the first human, an American, set foot on the moon, a Russian said to an American:

"It must be great to be an American tonight!"

No, "Ivan:"

"It is great to be an American EVERY night!"

That is just how it is, blood is thicker than water.

If America is threatened or if our Constitution is threatened, you had better watch out! I will STAND UP and fight, and if I need help, I will choose a "kid" born in America, educated in America, who played sports in America, and who was trained by the U.S Marines, U.S Army, U.S. Navy, U.S Air Force, the U.S. Military Academy, our Air Force Academy, Annapolis, etc., etc., over someone else who might just "cut and run" when push comes to shove, as happened in WWII and countless other situations that have cropped up over our brief 200 year history.

If your native country got "raped" during WWII, YOU are the ones who that let it happen, and those kids mentioned above are the ones who came over to "bail out" your collective asses. The "goose step" did not frighten those kids very much. Americans don't know the total humiliation of being "raped." We have NO FEAR of someone coming in the middle of the night to take one of us away. Our Constitution specifically allows us to have guns for just such an occasion if such ever occurred, however unlikely. Many Americans have more "fire power" than the so called "professionals." That is just how it is, blood is thicker than water. Be careful! Don't count America out yet! That is just how it is, blood is thicker than water.

May God bless you and your family during this holy season.

Don't bother with handhelds. Too many wires, not enough power, hard to hear audio, poor noise filtering...

If you despam my email addy, I'll sell you a Cobra 25LTD that's just been collecting dust on my shelf for a few years. It was one I picked up in package deal. I use sideband radios only.

$50 shipped. radio, bracket, mike, power cord. I'll test it again before packing it up. I can get double that on EBay!

(remove DONTSPAMME from my addy)

FREE!!

For advanced techs and serious radio hobbyists, we're now offering a FREE copy of our previously published "CB EPROM DATA BOOK" by Martin Pickering. (EPROM = Erasable Programmable Read Only Memory.) We sold it for many years but it's now out of print. This little manual of 60 illustrated pages is an absolute GEM of CB technical knowledge you'll just never find anywhere else. And it's yours for FREE from our Web site.

This book reveals the secrets of advanced channel programming, and picks up where our "CB PLL DATA BOOK" (www.cbcintl.com/pllbook.htm) leaves off. You'll get a thorough background in how these amazing programmable chips can be used to modify many popular CB PLL circuits for expanded frequency coverage. Covers the basic programming techniques, and even includes real PC board artwork for making EPROM circuits. Sample artwork includes EPROM boards for the popular MB8719, PLL02A, ï¿½PD2824, and ï¿½PD858 PLL circuits.

Best of all, the price is right--namely, FREE! Download your FREE copy of "THE CB EPROM DATA BOOK" (948 KB Adobe PDF) at:

To learn the technical TRUTH about CB Radio without all the hype from people who are just plain ignorant, check out the following books from CBC International. They're selling right now at a big discounts on our EBAY & AMAZON stores too.

Check it out!

To see exactly what these books look like, plus all the specific, chapter-by-chapter details, see our Web at:

www.cbcintl.com

Some of the books included are:

BOOK #1: THE "SCREWDRIVER EXPERT'S" GUIDE To Peaking Out & Repairing CB Radios. List $25. The most popular "big dummy's" guide ever published on do-it-yourself CB repairs & modifications. Covers peaking of receivers, transmitters, modulation, mike problems, antenna & SWR problems, detailed frequency modifications for both crystal & PLL radios. Loaded with charts, illustrations, and specific instructions for most brands including the new export models. This latest edition also covers slider and broadbanding tricks, FM conversions, and much more!

BOOK #2: THE CB PLL DATA BOOK. List $20. The only complete reference source on CB PLL synthesizer circuits ever published! Detailed PLL theory explained in layman's terms. How they work, and how to modify them for many more channels. Includes specific PLL block mixing diagrams, truth charts, & IC pin function diagrams for nearly every PLL chip ever used. Covers all the most popular U.S. & export chassis, with specific listings of all models using the chip.

BOOK #3: UNDERSTANDING & REPAIRING CB RADIOS. List $42. Giant 370-page technical book for the professional repairman. Picks up where the "SCREWDRIVER EXPERT'S" GUIDE leaves off. Includes circuit descriptions & troubleshooting guide for 23- & 40-Ch., crystal & PLL, solid-state & tube, AM, FM, SSB, CW, American & export models. Covers test equipment (& where to find it), transistor basics, synthesizers, receivers, transmitters, power supplies, T/R switching, antennas, interference, parts & accessory sources. Over 350 illustrations including schematics, charts, and photos. Huge subject index also lets you look up repairs by symptoms. This is "must" reading for any serious CB technician!

Hi, thanks for the info. I have tried all the usual sources for the books, everyone seems to be sold out. I'm not keen on ordering from the US, hence why I asked if anyone has any on pdf format. I already have the free ones (also hardcopy) but can't find anything else.

Thanks

Jay

Good Luck with your 8 barrel feed system.

Yagi design is not just about the feed system. There is an interaction between the feed and the tuning of the Yagi. Especially the driven element and reflector. While computer modeling is nice to compare. Nothing beats taking the antenna out to a certified antenna range and measure the performance.

Matching networks are just that. Simple designs work just as well as very complex designs. Yes dome designs do minimize pattern skews, but for amatuer and CB usage at 30 MHz. and below, you are not going to get that tight of a beam pattern to where pattern skewing is a major problem.

DAVE SUMNER, K1ZZ, CEO OF ARRL, RESPONDS TO K1MAN's LETTER

December 2, 2005

Glenn A. Baxter
Long Point Lodge
Belgrade Lakes, Maine 04918

Dear Mr. Baxter:

This is in response to your email of December 1, 2005 inquiring about W1AW operating practices.

W1AW is unique in that it is the only station that operates in accordance with the provisions of 97.113(d) of the FCC rules. The rules require that the station schedule operations on at least six MF and HF amateur bands using reasonable measures to maximize coverage, and that a schedule of operating times be published at least 30 days in advance.

As W1AW trustee it is my policy that W1AW adhere to the FCC rules. The station operates in accordance with the published schedule. The W1AW trustee and control operators also take seriously our obligation under 97.101(b) to cooperate in selecting transmitting channels and in making the most effective use of amateur service frequencies. For example, we transmit two brief warning messages prior to the commencement of a scheduled transmission as a courtesy to operators who may be engaged in communications on the scheduled frequencies (Ed. comment: This practice was FIRST used by K1MAN), and we deliberately keep our voice bulletin transmissions brief and limited in number.

Sincerely,

(signed)
David Sumner, K1ZZ
Trustee, W1AW

K1MAN editorial comment:

In other words, 97.113(d) of the FCC rules allows W1AW to pay a control operator for a 40 hour work week (pecuniary interest) for doing exactly what K1MAN does without any pay whatsoever, and doing it infinitely better, thus drawing a $21,000 "fine." W1AW "dumps" on existing QSO's every day and K1MAN only when some moron like K3VR

parks there on frequency in order to be "dumped" on, a criminal violation by K3VR of the Goldwater Law. Sumner was a law school drop out and Hollingsworth was sick on the day they taught law at law school. Sumner's letter is a "get out of jail free" card for K1MAN, and Dave will certainly be called as a witess in court along with Hollingsworth. Both men are in alleged criminal violation of the Goldwater Law as well by failing to discourage interference with K1MAN amateur information bulletins:

It is an interesting snub that K1ZZ does not use the call K1MAN in his arrogant middle manager mental midget letter, Hi. Eat your heart out Dave, AARA, the American Amateur Radio Association, has more class than ARRL, the "national association for amateur radio." By the way, exactly what is a "radio relay league" anyway?

73 and GL de K1MAN.

See www.K1MAN.com

Dave Sumner, K1ZZ
ARRL Chief Executive Officer
American Radio Relay League
225 Main Street
Newington, Conn. 06111

1 December 2005

Dave,

What is W1AW's current policy with regard to its bulletins, and can you refer me to the ARRL Board minute which established this policy? Specifically, does W1AW listen and/or QRZ each published scheduled frequency before transmitting? If the frequency is busy, does W1AW QSY, delay, or even terminate the scheduled bulletin?

The policy published in QST that I have found is to stick to the published schedule regardless of whether the frequency is busy or not, just as is the policy of K1MAN for information bulletins, which is also consistent with many years of W1AW operating practice as well.

You will remember that K1MAN was "fined" in 1990 with regard to this policy, and my appeal of these "fines" to the full Commission was "deep sized" and thus blocking my further appeals to the D.C. Court of Appeals and the United Stated Supreme Court. Also, these "fines" were never litigated in Federal District Court here in Maine, and my subsequent civil suit to resolve this matter in Federal District Court against the FCC was dismissed. My related civil suit in Federal District Court against ARRL was also dismissed. My many attempts to resolve this matter have thus been repeatedly thwarted. K1MAN was then "fined" again regarding this same policy in April of 2005, a full fifteen years after the original FCC action, thus creating a further legal nightmare for the Commission, of course.

I am a member of ARRL. Thank you for your attention to this request.

Best personal regards. 73.

The rules require that the station schedule operations on at least six MF and HF amateur bands using reasonable measures to maximize coverage, and that a schedule of operating times be published at least 30 days in advance.

As W1AW trustee it is my policy that W1AW adhere to the FCC rules. The station operates in accordance with the published schedule. The W1AW trustee and control operators also take seriously our obligation under 97.101(b) to cooperate in selecting transmitting channels and in making the most effective use of amateur service frequencies. For example, we transmit two brief warning messages prior to the commencement of a scheduled transmission as a courtesy to operators who may be engaged in communications on the scheduled frequencies (Ed. comment: This practice was FIRST used by K1MAN), and we deliberately keep our voice bulletin transmissions brief and limited in number.

Sincerely,

K1MAN editorial comment:

In other words, 97.113(d) of the FCC rules allows W1AW to pay a control operator for a 40 hour work week (pecuniary interest) for doing exactly what K1MAN does without any pay whatsoever, and doing it infinitely better, thus drawing a $21,000 "fine." W1AW "dumps" on existing QSO's every day and K1MAN only when some moron like K3VR

parks there on frequency in order to be "dumped" on, a criminal violation by K3VR of the Goldwater Law. Sumner was a law school drop out and Hollingsworth was sick on the day they taught law at law school. Sumner's letter is a "get out of jail free" card for K1MAN, and Dave will certainly be called as a witess in court along with Hollingsworth. Both men are in alleged criminal violation of the Goldwater Law as well by failing to discourage interference with K1MAN amateur information bulletins:

It is an interesting snub that K1ZZ does not use the call K1MAN in his arrogant middle manager mental midget letter, Hi. Eat your heart out Dave, AARA, the American Amateur Radio Association, has more class than ARRL, the "national association for amateur radio." By the way, exactly what is a "radio relay league" anyway?

Dave,

What is W1AW's current policy with regard to its bulletins, and can you refer me to the ARRL Board minute which established this policy? Specifically, does W1AW listen and/or QRZ each published scheduled frequency before transmitting? If the frequency is busy, does W1AW QSY, delay, or even terminate the scheduled bulletin?

The policy published in QST that I have found is to stick to the published schedule regardless of whether the frequency is busy or not, just as is the policy of K1MAN for information bulletins, which is also consistent with many years of W1AW operating practice as well.

You will remember that K1MAN was "fined" in 1990 with regard to this policy, and my appeal of these "fines" to the full Commission was "deep sixed" and thus blocking my further appeals to the D.C. Court of Appeals and the United Stated Supreme Court. Also, these "fines" were never litigated in Federal District Court here in Maine, and my subsequent civil suit to resolve this matter in Federal District Court against the FCC was dismissed. My related civil suit in Federal District Court against ARRL was also dismissed. My many attempts to resolve this matter have thus been repeatedly thwarted. K1MAN was then "fined" again regarding this same policy in April of 2005, a full fifteen years after the original FCC action, thus creating a further legal nightmare for the Commission, of course.

I am a member of ARRL. Thank you for your attention to this request.

Best personal regards. 73.

DAVE SUMNER, K1ZZ, CEO OF ARRL, RESPONDS TO K1MAN's LETTER

December 2, 2005

Glenn A. Baxter
Long Point Lodge
Belgrade Lakes, Maine 04918

Dear Mr. Baxter:

This is in response to your email of December 1, 2005 inquiring about W1AW operating practices.

W1AW is unique in that it is the only station that operates in accordance with the provisions of 97.113(d) of the FCC rules. The rules require that the station schedule operations on at least six MF and HF amateur bands using reasonable measures to maximize coverage, and that a schedule of operating times be published at least 30 days in advance.

As W1AW trustee it is my policy that W1AW adhere to the FCC rules. The station operates in accordance with the published schedule. The W1AW trustee and control operators also take seriously our obligation under 97.101(b) to cooperate in selecting transmitting channels and in making the most effective use of amateur service frequencies. For example, we transmit two brief warning messages prior to the commencement of a scheduled transmission as a courtesy to operators who may be engaged in communications on the scheduled frequencies (Ed. comment: This practice was FIRST used by K1MAN), and we deliberately keep our voice bulletin transmissions brief and limited in number.

Sincerely,

It's rather pathetic when someone can only their own self-worth by comparing himself to the perceived flaws in others.

I have difficulty believing that there is a totally free Smith Chart Program out there. There are some demo software that is windoze and Linux based. Since the Smith Chart is a trade mark of Analog Intrusments, Inc. anyone using a smith chart in their software has to pay royalties.

I have noticed plenty of forging at the moment.
I have also noticed people using IDs related to another person in the group. Not exactly forging, as they are not using their ID or Email address, but the identity they use causes confusion.

It went quiet for a while, but the trolls appear to be making an extra effort right now. Just be sure to keep your sense of humour.

Like prostitution?
I expect that there is some serious money to be made running a business close to a state line, when it is illegal on the other side of it. As long as it is not something they will carry back across, surely no law is broken.

Not just America, our "reality" shows seem to get a big audience.
Some, after coming out of "Big Brother" have complained that the TV company ony showed the bad parts with them... and that is why they were voted out.
Those people still don't get it. Big Brother is about control. Not only does Big Brother control their lives, but he also controls public perception of the people in the house.

I do not bother with such things, gossip about which celebrity is doing what (or who). I generally listen to the radio, get the news from there.
Only problem is that, when some "reality" show is on TV, all news through all sources ends up being about who stuffed who in the show.
Main headline right now... who won "I'm A Celebrity". If I cared, I would have watched it and I would already know.

> Turn on morning talk shows

No thanks, with women talking of catching a boyfriend shagging their Grandmother and men being told on live TV that their girlfreind is really a man, I'll give that a miss.

At one time, there was a saying about not washing your dirty linen in public. But this goes beyond that, people telling the whole World what losers they are. Then they are told to make up... while millions of people watch and judge them.

The shows in some countries make our shows look tame, but I certainly hope that we do not follow their ideas. Have you seen those Japanese game shows?

Is it really such a large number, or does it just seem that way?
Some people appear to be professional contestants, they have been spotted in several game shows.
But, how much of this "reality" chat really is reality? Apparently, one UK TV show got caught out... the guests were fake. How many more are fixing the guests and how many guests are simply attention seekers making up a story for the fame of TV?

Peter.

I have seen a few for repair. The 867 looks like Maxon handywork. Not sure about the Route 66, not seen one for some years, but maybe also Maxon type design.
The problem is that the name on a UK CB was not who designed and made the board. Makes like Binatone would use a range of different boards. Fidelity are a great example... Cybernet, Amstrad and the totally crap, strangely named, "Great" chassis were used in different models.
Having worked for electronic manufacturers, I have seen how it works...
A company buys batches of the pre-made boards, then obtains all the casing parts and builds "their" product.
or
The company simply get the manufacturer to build a batch of a product with their name on it. All this company really do is market the product.

I do not know what I did with the PLL but, looking through my components...

TC5080 / TC5081 / TC5082 (set)
TC9102
TC9109

No 9119s sat about, maybe it was one of the 9109s.

I have only seen one Icom CB, but I do have a schematic for it. Not a brilliant radio, well done for getting a Rotel in exchange.

We was quite late getting Broadband around here, BT couldn't be arsed to

They could probably same the expense of digging... just lay it all in the old pit tunnels

Has you ignorant crossposting fool. Why do you have to bring this shit back into this group. WE COULD GIVE A FLYING FUCK LESS ABOUT K1MAN SHIT!!!! Do you need some lessons (and this part goes to all the other turds that will blindly follow) on how to use newsgroups and headers? Do you ride the special bus to school?

Yes those black people are aren't they. Ooh you mean the white people?? yea. shocking they should complain about TNB. The thing is, acting as they do, these black "niggers" (as the statements go and also how other black people class their lower brothers) alienate themselves and its no wonder that most "racist claims" are dismissed as TNB so the real genuine cases of racism tend to make us just think "here we go again" rather than take the claims seriously. Remember the cry wolf story.
Some of the stories on that site put me off pick and mix or help yourself foods. Not simply because of the blacks behaving like animals but anyone with any disease could "play" with the food your about to pick up.... urgh..... mind you, seeing some of the staff in McDonalds and similar eateries puts me off their cuisine somewhat too. My god, if you knew some of the things that happens to your food before you get it you'd never eat again....

Graham

So was I..at first.
However, this behavior by corporate America is typical these days.
Whether one agrees with the views or not, our forefathers died for the rights to express such views, no matter how foul or offensive.

It has always been held by the US government that unless the definition of "obscene" has been fully met and embraced, such type views (regardless of media utilized to convey) would be legal.
Many personal rights have been lost and abused under this Bush administration, such as several of the amendments coming under attack.
George W. Bush swore with his hand upon a Bible to defend the Constitution, yet he waged war upon it, seeking to weaken portions of it.

For ease of transport between vehicles, proven quality, durability and performance, nothing beats a Wilson magnetic mount. Go with the 500, 1000, or 5000. It will outlast most of the radios.

>I got the 1000. What is the 500? Is that new?

Nah. It's a tad smaller than the 1000, handling less wattage. They even have one smaller than that called "Lil' Wil"..I've used the 500, 1000 and 5000 with the same radio and couldn't really tell any difference. Of course, I wasn't pumping thousands of watts, either.

I know it was like that back in the early 60s on cb, but not now. Everyone has a job and they don't ride the gov.

this isnt a matter of crimenal law. it is a matter of the provider's TOS which is a contract between the web sight and earthlink. I am very surprised that you dont know about TOS and how a provider can kick you off if you violate his TOS. sheeze.

An ISP is a private entity and does not have to allow it even if it is legal. When you sign up with an ISP, you are entering into a contract and agreeing to its terms and conditions. If the ISP says no hate speech, then they can legally pull the page or sight and even cancel the user's service due to violating the contract.

It's not illegal - no law has been broken. It is simply against Earthlink's published guidelines. Mass market ISP's simply cannot afford the free market fallout from such politically incorrect hostings.

Duhhhhhhhhhh, you haven't seen an amateur radio exam in the last 35 years that requires technical competence to pass.
And you can thank the FCC & ARRL for that and the present state of ham radio.

Hello Dee.

As fate would have it, most times the isp couldn't care less about usenet.

Why can't we all do a bong as radio operators and report back? These cross-posted imaginary lines between bands and privileges turn into flames for the most part on the rec.radio circuit, reckon?

The no-code apartment dwellers' have drawn too much attention to themselves already it seems, and yet they cry for an easier entry to phone.

The whole ball -o- wax is slowly dying but that's another topic for the new year. At any rate, I've always respected your opinion so far, Dee.

They have dummied down the ham license so the venders like Icom can sell more radios. After 30 years I feel ham radio is now a waste of time.

Merry Christmas to everyone on the group.

As I prepare for Christmas, and with the children being around more during the holiday, I may soon disappear for a short while.

To whoever ends up taking my place as the Troll's obsession, suffering their leg being humped,
I hereby offer my sincere apologies. But, hey, you could take a break and actually spend time with your families... quality time, without one hand glued to the keyboard and the other to the mouse :~)

Get your head out from your ass and accept the facts...

I have no "remailer" and I have NEVER, ever used one in my life.
I connect direct to my ISP and send mail and news messages direct through my ISP.

It is so damn simple to see, as the ISP stamp their IP and name in the header...

> NNTP-Posting-Host: 195.74.115.192

As it says, Enternet.

> X-Trace: 7 Dec 2005 06:02:56 GMT, 195.74.115.192

195.74.115.192 = Enternet

It doesn't get any easier than that. But, here are more details on IPs that I may have been allocated recently...

> but you DID use it, and that is ON the record.

No. According to the header YOU supplied (assuming you got that correct)...

My ISP NNTP server, Enternet, decided to send my post to "caladan".
Caladan decided to send a copy on to "newspeer.public-internet.co.uk", who decided to send a copy to "molokai.public-internet.co.uk", who decided to send a copy to "news.glorb.com".

According to the header you provided, Google would have got their copy from "news.glorb.com".

I do NOT run the Internet, so have NO control over which servers each news server decides to send copies to. Do you tell Google or AOL which news servers they should use?
You clearly watch too many films.

> Anyone can trace your IP,

Almost anyone... you failed.
You traced the wrong number, you traced ISPs, you found the wrong city, you got names mixed up (see below)... and you even came up with some idea that I control all the servers on the Internet.
Can you not get anything right?

> there are still security holes that > can be used to discover the real sender of a message, > even when you have "chained" it through multiple remailers,

If you knew ANYTHING about tracing people, you would not come out with such shyte.
You would also have taken up that other challenge, state where that other message came from.
Want some help with it, or are you avoiding it?

> and it will eventually show Birmingham, Birmingham, Birmingham.

If you get "Birmingham, Birmingham, Birmingham", then you are failing miserably. But, considering that you got everything else wrong, it's no surprise.

> you were quick to point out the chocolate was "Cadbury" rather > than "Cadbury's"...

LOOK AGAIN.
When you are unable to read names and distinguish between different people, it really should be no surprise that you fail on all your other quests.
I could almost feel sorry for you.

> Spare me your prating about how you > "never heard of Birmingham" and "never set foot in the west midlands",

Again, you are failing on your reading skills...

I NEVER said that I "never heard of Birmingham".
I NEVER said that I have "never set foot in the west midlands". In fact, I stated that I once visited the NEC back in the early 80s.

You really should learn to read.

> I don't believe it for a moment and no one else does either.

Oh, so you now speak for the whole World, do you?
You really need to seek professional help, go find someone who can drug you up enough to be sure that you pose no threat to the general public.

Merry Christmas.

I already explained how to read that header, but I clearly have to give you the "Dummy's Guide"...

First of all, as I cannot be arsed to spend time checking headers to make sure you have read one correctly and quoted it correctly, I will assume that the above header is accurate.
Now, as each server adds it's name to the beginning of the list, you must read that header backwards:

1. !62.249.253.78
The source of the message. As my system is not a server, it is simply referred to by the IP address that the ISP allocated to me at the time I made the post. However, once I hit the "disconnect" button, that number ceases to be a link to me or my computer.

2 !entanet
The name of the NNTP server that I sent the message to. At this point, where the message goes is totally out of my control.

3. !news4.google.com
!caladan
!newspeer.public-internet.co.uk
!molokai.public-internet.co.uk
!news.glorb.com
A list of the servers that were used to get the message from the news server I used to the news server that you used. As I do not run the Internet, I have NO control over where each server decides to send it next.

4. g2news1.google.com
Your server at your end... The Troll's friend, Google.

Do you really think that some UK server exists purely as a "port" to just one service in another country? It is simply relaying messages between other Internet servers, any messages that are sent to it.

> Anyone can do the trace.

Except you, clearly.

> I am not about to post screen shots from my network > analyzer software.

Would that be the one that tells you where someone was born, their work history and gives a list of places they lived??
As the bird in the clock says... Cuckoo.

> It was not designed to test the correctness of the answers. Just your reactions to > the questions. The fact you let Graham "go ahead of you in the queque" spoke

I have told you so many times that you are embarrassing yourself by acting so stupid.
GET YOUR HEARING AID FIXED!!!

As I do not live on the Internet, I almost always take more than the four hours you allowed to reply. If you had any "Net Stalking" abilities, you would have spotted that I commonly take days to reply to a message.
But, once again, you must put your total ignorance on public display.

Also, if you had any knowledge of such tests, you would have considered that anyone who did not know the answers will take longer as they need to look the answers up.
But, once again, you must publicly display your ignorance.

> I don't have to prove a thing.
>
> It's not for me to prove how or why, although I can guess.

What you really mean, is that you CANNOT prove it because it is all in your imagination.

But, as you mention the subject...
As I have no need to answer to you, explain where I live or give personal details, you should not whine because you don't believe the facts.
As you don't even give a Christian name, and keep changing your ID and Email address, you are hardly in a position to accuse others of "hiding".
When you give your full name, birth place, present address, employment details, work history, and a regular Email and ID that you stick to, maybe you can start complaining that other people are hiding.

> I will not go digging up the posts where you complain to your buddies in Lille, Selfridges, posts about making ends meet??? This is getting too stupid even to laugh at.

I am beginning to get the impression that you really believe this crud you're spouting.
Considering the time you are spending examining every tiny detail of my headers, pinging IP numbers and dreaming up ideas about every part of my life - who I am, where I live, where I have lived, where I was born, where I work, where I have worked, what jobs I have done in the past, what food I like to eat, etc - I would say that you have a serious obsession.

I would suggest that you take any outstanding issues you have to someone qualified to drug you up until all your troubles go away.

Merry Christmas.

Sorry but I completely disagree with you. There is absolutely nothing stopping anyone who wants to build and use their own kit or to talk about it or suchlike and to advance themselves in the field of radio communications. The interest in this part is just not there like it was in the past so if the licence conditions had not changed then Amateur would be dead in the water.
Making the exam technical to the extreme of sitting a practical exam and designing and building your own kit, and of course the other argument of Morse set at at least 25+ WPM wouldn't have encouraged more people into the Hobby, it would have killed it. You may disagree and be indignant of the new breed of Amateur and those who just use it to piss about would be using it anyhow, licence or not but you have to move on. The irresponsible users have been there for decades, not since the lowering of licence conditions.
Its like investing in a shoe shine business. Back in the 50's and 60's you would have had a thriving business... but times have changed.. shoes have changed... how many shoe shine businesses have survived? I don't know of any. They moved on, stayed in the same line of business and now sell shoes or "sneakers" rather than try to clean them. Things change and you have to move on.
Its easy to blame others for Amateurs "Decline" but there is still the top level licence for those with the interest to go all the way and there is nothing to stop experienced Amateurs to encourage and help their "underlings" develop as many do. Sitting back and moaning about how others have let it decline while doing nothing themselves to help the situation is pure laziness.
Another analogy is you don't have to pass an HGV licence and drive a huge truck just to drive on the roads (god bless the truckers ;o)

Graham

Then that's fine for you and your CW friends but is it really the top goal all Amateurs set out to achieve... to go dah dah dah dit dit dit dah dah dah? Don't you also enjoy talking to distance stations with your voice too?
I agree that the part of the spectrum allocated to Morse should be left for Morse and those who wish to use Morse should have a slightly different level of licence/callsign to acknowledge this but it seems its always but "always" levelled at us with any discussion about seemingly low licensed intermediates/M3's/general class that unless your an extra class/advanced you are some sort of trailer park scum. Not for one minute am I saying you say this but its the general impression most get from some "alleged" full licence holders in these newsgroups.

Well, thank you Mary Whitehouse.
Lets hope you also complain about the ethnic sites disrespecting white people. The thing is with niggermania.com although some of the language used is of a racist nature, most of the stories ring true to many of us who have lived in black areas which always seem to turn into ghetto's wherever they are. Racist view or general observation? Ill let the readers decide.

I knew of a spoof site that a girlfriend I once had made and the only defamatory thing on it was a single link to the BNP party which is a legitimate and legal party in the UK and the host deleted her website immediately for this. No warning or anything it was simply removed. That was a Yahoo Geocities site. I personally find that a disgusting attitude for them to take as it took her many weeks of hard work to make her site and they never even warned her first.
Free speech seems to only apply for the ethnic minorities.

Graham

Don't get caught up in the "spelling" wars. I noticed that my fingers had typed the wrong one just after I hit the send button.

Free speech has never meant that a person can say whatever they want, wherever they want, whenever they want. There are many laws defining what you can and cannot do. For example, I can stand on a public sidewalk (i.e. publicly owned properties) handing out flyers all I want to so long as I am not doing anything illegal. On the other hand, if I want to hand them out in the shopping center (i.e. privately owned, not paid for by tax dollars), I must have the permission of the shopping center owner/management. The subject of the flyers is irrelevant. Our tax dollars do not pay for the ISP and so as a private entity they can limit usage of their service.

A business can legally prevent its employees from handing out political material (campaign buttons, flyers, etc) on its premises. If they have such a policy (and this has been clearly published to its employees), they can fire an employee for doing so and it does not violate the employee's right to freedom of speech.

To really understand the First Amendment and what freedom of speech really means, one needs to study it in the context of history. It had been a common practice for governments and rulers to throw people in jail simply for criticizing the government or even simply disagreeing with its policies. The First Amendment was crafted to protect people from being jailed for such and to enable and even encourage open discussion and debate on issues. It was not intended to protect libel, slander, fraud, speech encouraging violence, etc. Nor was it intended to force people to listen to someone else's free speech. If someone comes on my lawn and starts making a speech, I can call the police and have him escorted off. Freedom of speech does not allow him to force me to listen or to use my property.

The extent to which freedom of speech applies is endlessly debated and the amendment endlessly interpreted. All that people can really agree on is that it was not intended to allow an "anything goes" type of approach. They cannot agree on what it does cover however.

Correct! The First Amendment does not cover anything a private person or a private company does. It applies only to actions by the government.

That obviously eliminates any restrictions an ISP might put into their usage agreements from "breaching the First Amendment. I'm always amazed at the number of people who don't understand the Bill of Rights. Walt must have been asleep in the back of the room when his teacher talked about the Constitution.

Walt's in the UK. I seriously doubt if they teach the US Constitution there. They may do a brief outline just as we get a brief summary of Britain's form of government but it's unlikely they would go into any depth on it.

Oh right, you lied about flushing me.... then you act childish..

I make a perfectly valid point in reply to a posting of yours and you immediately come back with a childish reply as I don't agree with you. This just goes to show the level of person you are. You bleat on about the decline of Amateur radio blasting the authorities that be then, when someone doesn't massage your ego in their reply, you lose control and act like this.

No need to go on is there really.

Horizontal effect of constitutionally guaranteed rights is an element of many countries' legal systems. When I studied a bit of law in Ireland, I learned about constitutional torts. The idea is that, take free speach, if torts law does not protect my right to free speach when it should, than this is a shortcoming on the part of the state, i.e. the court and the legislature. To rectify this, the plaintiff, when suing another private person in tort, can base his case on his constitutional right. In tort, there are about a dozen or so precedents where this reasoning was upheld.
In my own country, the Netherlands, the constitutionally protected rights do not have horizontal effect directly, but they are used for the interpretation of open norms in civil law, such as the public order exception to free contracting and the due care requirement in tort law.

I hope you learned something,

Martin Holterman

Except that I'm in the USA so I have nothing to worry about.

The UK is pathetic. Though I'm descended from Brits, I realize why my country declared independence. America may have its problems, but I expect that British culture will be extinct within a century, having first been turned into an joyless Orwellian police state before finally collapsing into anarchy.

"He did not know how long she had been looking at him, but perhaps for as much as five minutes, and it was possible that his features had not been perfectly under control. It was terribly dangerous to let your thoughts wander when you were in any public place or within range of a telescreen. The smallest thing could give you away. A nervous tic, an unconscious look of anxiety, a habit of muttering to yourself - anything that carried with it the suggestion of abnormality, of having something to hide. In any case, to wear an improper expression on your face (to look incredulous when a victory was announced, for example) was itself a punishable offense. There was even a word for it in Newspeak:
'facecrime,' it was called."

Id say you had quite a lot to worry about. Maybe not in respect of the content of your website (if it is yours of course) unless some of these black people get ahold of you of course, but everything else, gun crime, immigration, corruption... its all there in much larger amounts than in the UK.

Your Country is becoming a cess-pit of multi culteral misfit lowlifes. Declairing independance from the UK can only benefit the UK so I wouldnt get too excited about that. The website shows that only too well.

America may have its problems, but I

Anarchy you say? Like the NO saga and the ghettos in nearly every City in your Country you seem to forget about. The UK is a reasonably tolerant Country as far as Immigration and integration goes but the USA.... I honestly believe the UK is in a much stronger position in holding onto its identity than the US.
That said my sympaties go out to the genuine American people having to put up with this.

A George Orwell fan.... that explains the previous barmy statement. So many people seem to be convinced they are being filmed and watched by some organisation to bring them down or fit them up with some crime. As if anyone in reality gives two hoots about them or anything they do.... too full of their own importance which is realistically rated at 0 to such organisations if, infact, they actually exist. George Orwell.. hah...

It depends whether you are attempting to gain by deception I would say on that account. Pop stars always use alias's, like Harry Webb. Come to think of it, Shirley Crabtree too as his known name was Big Daddy. So many people in different walks of life go by different names these days.

Its definitely a crime to spell Walt as Wlat though ;o)

I thought I'd include this since so many of you choose to make derogatory remarks about CBer's rather than stick to the topic. (Code vs. No-Code, Restructuring, etc...) I personally like the code but you guys use the issue to take cheap shots at 11m ops. You should realize that many 11m ops visit these forums seeking to learn about ham radio, NOT be insulted. 73.

Hello fellow 11 meter enthusiasts,

I have a new idea. So much has been made of the fact that we (11m ops) have no real representation in DC while the amateur community has the ARRL. The USCBOA was a nice idea but seems to lack the organizational skills to get airborne. I got this idea while reading a ham forum thread where many amateurs were complaining about the ARRL allowing "chicken banders" to infiltrate the ham bands and vowing to cancel their membership. Well, here it goes.

JOIN THE ARRL! That's right; make them live up to their name. The AMERICAN (NOT Amateur ONLY) Radio Relay League. In the mid 60's, the number of CBer's outgrew the number of licensed amateurs. The price is $39.00/yr. and you need NOT be a licensed amateur to become a FULL member. You DO, however, need to be licensed for voting privileges though. I know that $39.00 is steep, but I've spent more on a power mic and this money REALLY does makes my voice louder. The 35 multiple choice Technician exam takes approx. 5 minutes to complete and the practice exams can be found on www.qrz.com as well as other popular ham sites. I'm sure there would be a bit of resistance in the beginning but the ARRL is made up of hams who are basically...politicians. That's right folks, let the first official lose "a close one" at the hands of an 11 meter "swing vote," and see how our "concerns" take on a little more importance. Here's a bonus, when you hear an old stodger cry "I'm canceling my membership," rejoice...that's called a two-for-one sale. Your vote no longer opposes theirs, it REPLACES it.

The kicker is that if you plan to be as vocal as I am, you need to run legal. I'm NOT preaching. I freebanded for over 10 years and LOVED it. However I send letters to my representatives and the FCC, so my house must be in order. Riley Hollingsworth himself can come to my QTH for a surprise visit. I sent a letter to my reps re. RM-9807 and asked why the FCC admitted that the MAJORITY of CBer's were in favor of dropping the 155 mi. limit rule, yet the ruling was swayed by "private interests," namely the ARRL and NAB. Not only did I receive a reply, but it included a reply from the FCC to an inquiry by my rep. Did it really make a difference?... maybe, maybe not, but I know at least three more souls know about this "voter's" displeasure. (An election year to boot!)

I sent a letter to Radio Shack (Tandy) in Fort Worth, TX re. their HTX-10 and its inability to be modified at their (RS's) request. I explained that there are some who may want the capability to "monitor" (;-P) the 11 meter band as well. I returned mine and told them that I would gladly pay the extra $50.00 to RF Ltd. for their Magnum 257(the modifiable version of the same rig) and will now purchase all my ham study material and 2m h/t elsewhere due to their policy. Again, did it make a difference...perhaps not, but at least they know that they've lost approx. $450.00 in sales plus restocking costs.

Remember, to be this vocal, you need to fly right. I miss freebanding and it gave me many many hours of pleasure over a ten year period, this is the best way I can give back to 11 meters. If you don't plan to quit freebanding, don't be too vocal and run a "common sense" set-up. Your ARRL vote still counts! I never ran amplifiers and worked the world with a Clear Channel Ranger AR-3500 (30 watt model) and a two element yagi. I also successfully encouraged many of fellow 11m ops to do the same. (Tech license, ARRL membership, & write reps.) It kills me when I hear hams flame us and there's little we can do because we don't want to attract the unwanted attention. Well, sometimes you have to defend yourself with the weapons the opposition gives you. The ARRL rates recently went up, you should hear the hams crying and threatening to cancel...go for it I say!

interesting thought and much more on topic than most of the stufff we see here

the problem ois that ARRL will take your money and still deny you your Aw, c'mon, Walt. We all know there are a lot of black people that genuinely don't deserve to be denigrated in any way. But then again, there are a lot that - simply by the way they act - do and this site does a screamingly funny job of it - only to that particular sub-group whom we've all encountered, mind, whether we choose to admit it or not..

We're just a few leagues ahead of you in the sewer pipe of political

I don't think it's so much that; it's more that American history is just too short to be worth teaching (certainly by European standards).

But I don't care what they don't like, ISPs are a dime a dozen and I can easily find another one. Actually, I'm inclined to subscribe to Altopia, they fiercely protect their customer's identities and really have no TOS other than turning over customer records if subpoenaed by an American court. Threatening to kill people is a crime and would qualify, but offending people is perfectly legal under U.S. law.

What I wonder is the legality of that 1894 book "Ten Little Niggers" on the site. If "hate speech" is ever criminalized in the USA, does that mean all historical literature must be destroyed to comply with the law? Keep in mind that schools have banned books by Mark Twain because he uses the word nigger, but in a historical perspective his use is not racist because that simply was the word used at the time.

Take "negro," for instance. We still have "United Negro College Fund" and I think they recently opened a hall of fame for the "Negro League" of baseball that operated in the first half of the 20th century before sports were integrated. The word had no derogatory connotation then, but today it is considered a racial slur as vile as "nigger." Even the "Afro-American" they insisted replace negro is now taboo and we are told we must call them "African-Americans." In a few years that term will be forbidden, it will be considered racist to even mention their race and that they are simply "Americans."

So when hate speech is outlawed, will all books written prior to the new era of enlightenment be burned? You mention Orwell, so I imagine history will be "rectified" to purge it of all things unorthodox.

Here's a relevant quote. The working title for the movie "Brazil" was "1984 1/2" so I suppose the Manifesto could be "1984 3/4":

"When someone interprets as derogatory almost anything that is said about him (or about groups with whom he identifies) we conclude that he has inferiority feelings or low self-esteem. This tendency is pronounced among minority rights advocates, whether or not they belong to the minority groups whose rights they defend. They are hypersensitive about the words used to designate minorities. The terms 'negro,' 'oriental,' 'handicapped' or 'chick' for an African, an Asian, a disabled person or a woman originally had no derogatory connotation. 'Broad' and 'chick' were merely the feminine equivalents of 'guy,' 'dude' or 'fellow.' The negative connotations have been attached to these terms by the activists themselves."

What is "offensive"? Describe it. According to the hand-wringing Liberals, "offensive" is anything that they, in their elitist mindset, disagree with and deem to be politically incorrect. Enter the Thought Police.
And, for instance, when one or more of us stands up to the PC crowd we are labeled as Right Wingers or, in their weak PC minds, as RightWing Religious Nuts.
Oddly enough these Liberals are all about censorship.
I love it when some limp-wristed whiner comes along and mewls, "I find that offensive." So what? Big fuc*ing deal! Who is he/she to determine what the rest of us can or cannot say or even feel?
To date I have found nary a word in our Constitution that has anything to do with protecting crybabies from being offended.
And as far as the web site in question goes, one need only not go there. Or is that concept too simple for the Thought Police to grasp ?

Its not that Liberals are stupid. Its just that they know so much that isn't so.

Earlier this summer, I bought a legal CB radio antenna from Radio Shack and followed the instructions on it when putting it on my car. Then right after it was on, while I was driving, something happened that never happened to me before while I didn't have it. A cop followed me for miles, following every turn I made, even though I wasn't speeding and wasn't breaking any laws. It was like he was following me for it being against the law to have a CB antenna on your car. Through my rearview mirror, I also saw him radio gfrom his car. I guess he was running my plates just because I had a cb antenna on my car. After miles, he finally turned a different way. I was on the regular roads when all of it happened, not on the freeway.

However, now a ham radio operator who was using his ham radio while driving was arrested for using his "cell phone" while driving. The ham radio operator fought it in court and after the judge heard the real descriptions about the radio, the judge ruled that it is similar enough to a cell phone that it is against the law to use it while driving.

That's what the judge basically said and still counted it as a cell phone.

I think most people use their cb's in their car. Now, since mobile ham radios and mobile cb's operate the same way, a separate hand held microphone that can be used with one hand, the judge has in effect also ruled that it's against the law to use any cb while mobile in your car, since a cb is similar enough to a cell phone. (although the judge had actually said it about mobile ham radios while driving).

So how come the police, judge, and federal government isn't going after the manufacturers of the mobile cb's (since those are made to be used in only cars and not homes, (you can't operate them on house current or AA batteries) same for mobile ham radios) or after the FCC who approved of these illegal radios as legal?

Ham Operator ticketed for using his ''cell phone''

Joey Hernandez, W2JLH, was issued a citation for operating his amateur radio while mobile. He went to court where the judge presiding had to consult a law book regarding the issue, and when the radio was described to him, he pronounced a guilty verdict to Mr. Hernandez, saying that the description of the use of the radio was too similar to the use of a cell phone and therefore he was guilty as charged. sorry about the double posting. I don't know how that happened.
Regarding my post, I just remembered, isn't there a federal law that is supposed to exempt any ham radio operators from any local or state laws that forbid the use of ham radios while mobile?

And yet, the ham radio operator is still counted as "guilty" by the judge for using his ham radio while mobile.

Or was this a federal judge who ruled that it was against the law for the ham radio operator to use his mobile ham radio while he is mobile?

which, in effect, also makes using mobile cb radios against the law while mobile.

going by the reasoning the judge gave about the ham radios.

I guess we all have to start looking for base cb radios now, unless you already have one.

But what's the use if you're trying to stay in contact with someone who is mobile while you're at home or vice versa?

Well you're obviously talking about the BBC and I thoroughly agree with your trenchant observations. However, it appears the attempted brainwashing has failed, as recent surveys have shown that today's children are actually less tolerant of other races than they were 20 years ago. Perhaps it's a backlash against the overtly obvious
'dysfunctionality is normal' propaganda spewed out by the Corporation (at public expense, of course).

Here in blighty it isnt illegal to use one while driving UNLESS..... you show signs of careless driving or lack of proper control of your vehical to which then the cb/amateur radio will be used as the cause of your clumsiness and you will be prosecuted.

To describe a cell phone as the same or near enough the same as a CB shows the Judges lack of understanding in this case. Cell phones have to be held to the ear to talk and listed rendering one hand useless for driving as its held to the head during the entire call(for god sake if your driving and have a headache dont hold your head or you will be pulled over thinking your on a cell phone) whereas CB/Amateur hand mics are only used when transmitting and can be rested on the steering wheel or kept to one side of the hand while operating the other functions of the car. (indicators, gear lever etc) so basically the Judge is a dick and the guys defence was bloody useless. Like i said earlier though if you show signs of losing control of your vehical or careless driving you will be prosicuted and the CB will be cited as the reason for your incompetance.

> I guess we all have to start looking for base cb radios now, unless you

Theres always the hands free option the same as mobile phones. As far as i know theres no law against using these, in the phones case your not meant to touch the phone to recieve or end calls with your hand otherwise you should be fine. Mind you thats in the UK but with all the laws we have im sure the US cant be worse.... or can it??

> But what's the use if you're trying to stay in contact with someone who

Pull over in a safe area to take the call or just listen? Personally as long as you are competent in talking on a mic while driving and you dont go into another world and lose concentration i wouldnt worry too much about it.

I believe Walt's right. History has shown it to be the case. The only sad thing is why we humans can't seem to maintain a healthy balance; a middle-of-the-road approach in all matters without this constant vacillating from one extreme to the other. We're like recovering alcoholics; we have to hit rock-bottom before we can hope to recover, it seems. :-|

I would say its more the perception that these minority groups seem to get more help in many cases to their indiginous white counterparts and they have this "racial discrimination" cry at them whenever whites repremand or disagree or voice their own opinion. This rarely used to happen 20 years ago and we all just got on with it. Nowadays though youngsters and many adults are fed up with being branded Racist by liberal do gooders and are sick and tired of being put second place abouve these immigrants/non-indiginous groups. You can only take so much before you (white people) feel you are the second class citizen and have to bow to their beliefs and religions otherwise your branded racist or bigoted.
Then theres the black gangs and the intimidation felt by many which was also hardly heard of 20 years ago. Also, as said by Enoch Powell many years ago, forcing different cultures to live with one another will eventually lead to rivers of blood frowing in the streets. Of course he was branded a screaming Racist but much of what he warned of is there.

Lets hope so...

Bodies like the Commission for Racial Equality will ultimately > be the authors of their own downfall. These things, like fashion, go > in cycles and history has a habit of repeating itself.

As many black and asian people "Use" racism for their own goals, eventually the "cry wolf" scenario will be understood and maybe those who scream they have been racially abused will be found out that they were targeted by something that they did or said rather than the colour of their skin. They will always call the race card though. Its a shame it appears to be a one way street though, try complaining that youve been racially abused by a black or asian and nothing seems to happen. Other way round you get arrested and thrown in a cell whether its proved or not.

Its also a well known fact that many of these racism cries like the one to ban Christmas and to call it winterval in Birmingham was laughed at by blacks and asians who had no problems with it at all but it was liberal busy bodies imposing what they thought would constitute bad feeling and upset Jews/muslims etc. Similarly with the St George Flag, these same liberal do gooders accuse it of being a racist flag and try to remove it wherever it is never mind its the Flag of England and banning it only fuells the hatred towards other races even though its not the blacks/asians who are bothered by these things, its the doo gooder busy bodies who look for racism everywhere and impose their beliefs on everyone causing it rather than subduing it.

England is still a mainly white Christian Country.... why dont these idiots remember this and stop pandering to the Libral perceived wishes of the immigrants and those from different races who were born here. They try to make us feel that "English and England" are dirty words.

Yeah, the Today programme on Radio 4 is a peach on St. George's Day.
Those 'presenters' (read "sucklers at the teat of the BBC Milch Cow) never miss the opportunity to rubbish and ridicule the event. In recent years, they have (not surprisingly) tried to totally redefine it to their own twisted standards. One year they even invited listeners to come up with a new design for the English flag! Bastards.

Gosh, Walt, you seem to imagine that most of the people in the USA gave a rat's ass what you leftist loonies across the Atlantic think of us.... Most of us don't even care what the leftists loonies here think of us were it not for their entertainment value. Indeed, the leftist element in the USA is totally impotent and that is documented by the fact that an overwhelming percentage of the Democratic party is distancing themselves from loons like Howard white-flag Dean

They look the same but are different.

The 458 was the original and converted easily.
The 490 used a different PLL but could still be converted.

Not exactly.

What is linked is that it is considered that tlaking on a cell phone while driving is a distrraction. What the judge has linked to this is talking on a CB radio is essentially the same kind of distraction.

This does set a precident in that it is the distraction that is at issue and that whether it is by a cell phone or CB radio or even an amatuer radio can lead to the same distraction.

What will be an interesting thing is if loud music can be linked into the same kind of distraction while driving.

This does pose a serious infringement on the use of CB and amatuer radio units within a car. It can also be said of commercial uses of the GMRS band as well as public safety and government vehicles.

In reality any radio is convertable. Just determines how much you want to spend on doing it. Some radios are easier than others.

I knew from reading your posts that we thought the same. Are you into phone? Post your phone number and I pick up the tab for the call. We can talk about how much smarter we are than stupid CB'ers. I would argue with that judge that having 2 kids in the back is ALSO a distraction, specially if one is dropping half chewed candy down your shirt.
So, should we not drive with kids in the car?
You can get some car manufacturers to help you / sponsor your case perhaps.

But in the "real world", that would boil down to a bunch of appointed experts going into the proverbial smoky back room and coming up with a bandplan that would have the force of law in the USA.

Other member countries might or might not make the bandplan into law.

End result is the USA's subband regulation would be determined by a committee made up of folks who are mostly not citizens of the USA, and even less beholden to American hams than the FCC or ARRL.

ARRL is criticized for making proposals on behalf of all US hams.
Imagine the reaction to IARU making the rules for all US hams...

I friend of mine was talking on a brand new on of these, on 37 LSB. It sounded terrible. These are notorious for bad adjacent channel rejection. Aside, from the digital front panel, I have not heard great things about it.

Nothing wrong with Aston Villa. They have been in top flight football for many years now. Im an Armchair fan of the Villa but I don't go to any of the matches and don't really follow football these days unless its an important England vs. the rest of the world type game. I can easily take it or leave it.

> while driving is a distrraction. What the judge has linked to this is

Not if your an experienced driver it isn't. Its like rubbing your head and patting your tummy. Some people can do it easily, others cant. Some people would get distracted and some wouldn't as far as talking on the CB.

Thenagain the same argument can be levelled at Car radio's/cassette recorders/CD's/passengers talking/kids in the back/Christmas lights on houses/short skirted women on the pavement or even constantly checking your speed limit in camera zones, are all these things going to be banned and treated as illegal. Nah........

It should only land you in trouble if its seen to distract your driving not that it "could". I "could" easily be a cold blooded murderer but as I haven't killed anyone yet (as far as I know ;o) im not... but I might be. The law is an ASS.

What they meant by "invading" was the advent of the nocode tech license.
The ARRL has no authority regarding ops, licensed or otherwise.

If you're not an ARRL official making a desperate, dying plea for more members, I can understand your position, but the ARRL's position regarding many things are so far removed from the majority of amateurs, just think how far removed they will be regarding cb'ers. Besides, the league has been reduced to representing just into another stripe in the geek patrol's badge and patch collection. In other words, some may think the league looks and sounds good, but they are largely impotent and represent the interests only of a select minority of ops. Besides, the league takes away what cb is all about, anonymity on the air. While I have heard many hams complain about this to cb'ers (as if it was their fault), how many do you think actually wrote letters to their officials to let them know their feelings?

I've been vocal all my life. I still violate the bullshit 150 mile dx rule on a regular basis. What I don't do, is blow bunches of watts. Operate smart and always be courteous. No problem.

(shrug) He can come to anyone's house for a surprise visit. It doesn't mean the person will be home and it doesn't mean one can't have his house in order and still dx. Here's a tip that's worth its weight in gold to illegal ops,,,,the FCC enforcement officers do NOT operate on weekends in regards to cb and ham radio operator complaints.

I like what we have now. The freedom to tag and run with a dx contact utilizing only numbers is way cooler without sending your personal identity out to the world. If desired, QSL cards can confirm the contact.

The ARRL has been suffering declining membership for years. She's not quite ready for the fork, but the pleas for membership crossed with the increase in dues and the declining membership says it doesn't take a keen nose to smell the main course is about done.

I have my ham ticket, and I'd like to outfit my car with a CB to monitor CB as well - if only to listen in, or possibly more. I'm big on keeping things organized on my car, and have a detachable face Icom IC-208h with the head mounted where the ashtray was... and would like to pull off something similar with a CB.

But, I can't seem to find a CB with a detachable face... the 79-290's face detaches for theft protection, not to operate. So then I think of getting the 75-822, and letting it scan in some inconspicuous location with power from the car, and an antenna fed from the outside (all part of the 'vehicle adapter'). I like it, because it also offers portability... but, now I've got no SSB.

So - is there a 'full featured' CB available? Anyone have something to reccommend (without flames)? If the detachable face isn't available, what's a good CB with SSB and small size?

And, possible PA hookup and WX?

OK - YES, I realize that I'm asking for everything in one rig... scan, ssb, detachable face (or small size), PA, WX... but I'm going to keep looking... Anyone have any suggestions on the closest to this if there's not one with it all?

Thanks,

Richard

Well there goes that idea, I wanted a cool looking cb/ssb/weather radio to mount in my new Jeep Commander. By the way, does a combo radio exist with cb/ssb/weather/shortwave/frs and a mod to listen to 10 meter? I don't have a ham radio license but I enjoy listening.

3006. Your Radio Leader Speaks: K1MAN Essay - Three Classes of Americans

K1MAN ESSAY - ES051212B -

Three Classes of Americans

1. Everybody else.

2. Yuppies

3. Wannabe Yuppies

All of life is governed by Jack Carlton's "Pecking Order Theory." Go where you will, there will be natural pressure to fall into some very definite "pecking order." If you bring along your own "pecking order," and follow THAT instead, there will, of course, be friction. This is where the "wisdom" of "When in Rome, do as the Romans do" comes from.

In the movie "The Great Escape," the German Colonel running the elite German prison camp asks the American flier if all Americans are so insolent? The reply was: "Just about 99%" So, America itself is a giant macro "pecking order." All the other micro "pecking orders" lie within.

The trick is to find a "pecking order" (or orders) that best suit you. Not so easy in a world where there are so many models to choose from. The Ten Commandments would be a good start!

A huge problem in the United States today is too little quality time being spent by parents with their children. America's great "experiment" exacerbates this problem greatly. Here, almost anything goes, and natural "market forces" sort all of it out and with many bruises and bumps along the way. America is not for the faint of heart.

A related problem is the lack of role models for kids. America will get it right, however. This will take some time as we continue to struggle with all the strong market forces that have a free play in our rough and tumble country, land of the free and home of the brave.

It's not a "CB" but "you know", it has no PA or Detachable face. BUT the Magnum 257 is killer, it has wonderful SSB performance, scan and the other features you need. Best of all it's basically a HTX-10, a wonderful 10M transceiver. So if you have HF privileges and you do not transmit on 11M then it would be ideal for you and possibly more economical since it will serve a dual purpose.

A scanner will also pick up CB :)

You might need a couple radios for all that. There are several 10 meter radios that cover the CB band, but not vice versa.

The important difference is, Fred, that our Royals do not rule the country... ie they don't make decisions to go to war, put up taxes, increase the price of fuel, etc. Your president does and over here most Brits would not agree with his attitude to the Iraq war, especially as it appears to have a religious justification in his mind.

I've visited the USA several times over the past few years since the Iraq business started and I've heard much criticism of your Republican government. Bush does not have the whole nation behind him as he likes to think.

I think he may be using the tradition of defining a person's religion by what his parents' religion was. In other words, xians claim all babies born to xian parents, even though the parents may not even have been particularly religious and were simply born to parents who also were claimed by the xian church. Same with moozlums, any baby unfortunate to be born into that cult is claimed as a member for life.

BTW, I was born to xian parents who also claimed me for their cult and the defining moment in my life was when they coerced me into joining their church at age 13. I haven't been to church since, and share Marilyn Manson's hope that I'll be remembered as the person who brought an end to xianity.

Hail Satan!

"Even though the god in all of these religions is basically the same, each regards the way chosen by the others as reprehensible, and to top it all, religionists actually PRAY for one another!
They have scorn for their brothers of the right-hand path because their religions carry different labels, and somehow this animosity must be released. What better way than through 'prayer'! What a simperingly polite way of saying: 'I hate your guts,' is the thinly disguised device known as praying for your enemy! Praying for one's own enemy is nothing more than bargain-basement anger, and of a decidedly shoddy and inferior quality!"

That radio is called an IC-706MKIIG.

With the mod, it covers everything, has 100 watts on HF, and will do 49MHz, MURS and FRS. I think it misses 220 though. With a tech ticket, you could cover a lot of ground with that one.

No. You need a license to transmit on ham bands. And you also need a beats of an antenna, to cover all the bands.

> Peter, G3PHO

Peter, you have to understand a subtlety of the USA government. Even though some members of the Congress criticize the President publically for the IRAQ war, the Congress actually controls the war. They pay for it!! The Congressional criticism is simply to posture for votes in the next election.
- - - - -
Reference: US Constitution Article 1, Section 7 Clause 1:

"All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills."
- - - - -

If the Congress was really interested in bringing the USA troops home all they have to do is stop the funding.

The most powerful person in Washington DC is NOT the President!! It is the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Why? Because ALL SPENDING [$$$$$$] authorizzation MUST initiate in the House of Representatives. The Speaker of the House assigns committee membership. The committees establish and implement policy by how they authorize spending. The full Congress votes on and approves how the money will be spent!

So, IRAQ is NOT Bush's war! It is a USA war. It is bought and paid for by the representatives of the people. And the people are NOT unanimous but are a majority. That disagreement is the basic strength of the USA form of government. I can criticize my government as a political right.

You guys must be kidding, there isn't one antenna to cover that many bands? There's gotta be something out there where you can change the impedance of an antenna with a switch or something for different bands, isn't there one???

By the way, the radio allows you to transmit, so are you stating that the police wont say anything unless they catch you actually talking on the mic??

I thought you needed a licence if you had a transceiver but no licence if its just a receiver. I believe that to be the case in the UK but of course the US may be different.

Either way round serves the same purpose. Why are you picking on this point?
It was just an example how some people can do two things at once and some others cant. The point was some people can drive perfectly safely while talking on a hand held mic while others find it difficult and cant concentrate on the two. As for if I pat my tummy and rub my head that's my business :oP

Pete appears to speaking of the people in this country as the nation, not Congress, and he is right..Bush does not have the whole nation behind him. What Bush does have...is a radical (but minority) segment of religious extremists and fanatic's support. Another person who enjoys fanatical religious zealot support you may have heard of..his name is Osama Bin Laden.
On an informational note, an internal but secret investigation is going on in the White House to see who leaked to the press the major disagreement Bush had with Blair very recently. Bush threatened (to Blair) to blow up the headquarters of Al Jazeera (because of their news content) to Blair and Blair very wisely informed and taught Bush why this would be a very idiotic thing to do.

That is a modified Amateur Radio radio. Not type accepted on CB. Not to mention, if caught, you could loose the rig and more importantly, your license (No flames please).
On a side note, most modern amateur rigs do not perform well on AM without a lot fussing around. They are produced to transmit low level AM where the modulation is introduced before the final amp. You would get better reports from a transmitter that is high level or where the modulation is introduced at the final stage.
I also recall that there was a remote mounted 40 Channel AM/SSB CB produced that contained all the functions in the microphone. There weren't many of these produced due to being harder to modify for "extra channels". I think it was produced by Midland?? Maybe someone in the group here will remember it.

Interesting point on the ARRL. I'm towards the belief that the ARRL's membership decline is a mirror to the radio hobby in general. I'm lumping Amateur Radio, CB, SWL and Scanner listeners together. Our main compitition seems to fall into the ever growing technologies on the home PC and the internet. As a new and more inviting technology that doesn't bother neighbors and still accomplishes the fun of talking with others, it poses as a major competitor to radio.
As we become more and more a plug and play society, the technologies of past will slowly disappear. Look at our selection of "Legal" CB's. They are becoming few and fall between compared to 15, 20, 25 years ago. I see Amateur Radio following in the same path. We see far less inovative approaches to communications as things are handed to us from a major manufacturer.
I personally don't buy into the Ham is better than CB routine often seen and heard about. Each has it's own value and contributes towards hobby enjoyment and public service. But since we really haven't changed much as an active community for the last couple of decades, we are slowly marching towards the way of the dinosaours. :(

So ask the judge why the Cop doesn't get nicked for a fine while using his "cell phone" to run your plates while he's driving?

I've heard of some chick beating a littering ticket; chucked a cigarette butt out the window while driving. She picked up the carbon paper the Cop threw on the ground from his ticket pad and brought it to court. When she showed it to the judge he dismissed the ticket.

Yes, I'm well aware of who Honus was but Richard Wagner has made more of an impact on my life. Now if you told me Mookie Wilson or Paul O'Neill died, I'd probably already know and it would affect me more than a partying footballer I've never heard of. As for 5th Beatle, I always felt that was either Pete Best or George Martin. Stu Sutcliff was the forgotten Beatle and if I remember right, Gerry Marsden of Gerry and the Pacemakers had a #1 before the Beatles did. Now be careful with all this nonsensical information when crossing at the zebra. ;)

It's not illegal till you press the little button on the side of the mic.
Then you can be in deep doo-doo, IF someone catches you which is highly unlikely because to will probably splatter MUCH less :) . An amatuer rig

You "heard" incorrect. A judge is REQUIRED to follow the law. A judge may not indiscriminately dismiss such a case based on information that another committed the same offense. It has no relation to said original crime. The imaginary woman's action that broke the law was in no manner affected, prevented, altered, provoked, endorsed, or caused by your imaginary officer's actions. In other words, his actions-post wrting her the ticket do not excuse her actions. Of course, one would expect one with a remote understanding of the law to realize such, but then again, those who understand the law do not often find themselves in a position where they nee plead guilty to criminal charges. Go ahead and 'splain.

Well, you did imply that the reason the "Italians and Englishmen" were "yelling at Arabs in Australia" was "for not being from there" and not for anything more serious, like church burning and firing into children's choirs.

no they should have refused to prefrom them and then informed the chain of comand

the "orders" were unlawfull and they should have had the gut to refuse them

your source?

oh that is right you don't need sources people are never aquitted of any charges and even if they are they were still guilty riight Stevie

Many of us like it.
If not, use your filters as some do so you won't see them

It's not worth replying to every FA and saying "go away".

FA's have been here since the start of ebay.

Nobody said there was. It could be questioned whether he was suggesting that Aston Villa fans are rabid, or if he just meant me.

So were Leeds, until they got rid of O'Leary. Now, where did he go?

> Im an Armchair fan of the Villa but I don't go to any of the matches

I just keep an eye on news and scores so I can keep up with my Son, who supports Man-U plus a local lower league team. We also hope to see Warnock lead his team into the Premiership.
That would liven up the premiership, with another manager getting sent off for arguing with the ref.

> Btw, don't forget a lot of Birmingham people support Birmingham City :o)

No more than I would expect from a load of Brummies. I would expect that everyone supports their local teams to a certain level. We have two main local teams, separated by one league and a county border.

Peter.

K1MAN BULLETIN - 051216A -

W1AW AND K1MAN JOIN FORCES

Dateline - Belgrade Lakes, Maine - 16 December 2005

W1AW/4 came up on 14.275 MHz. yesterday, 15 December 2005, calling CQ for their special event station from the ARRL Christmas toy drive national distribution center in Memphis, Tennessee. K1MAN answered, and Chief Operator Darryl was called to the W1AW mic. The two stations had a short QSO with Darryl explaining the toy drive project in detail. W1AW is the flagship station of ARRL, the American Radio Relay League (www.ARRL.org), and K1MAN is the flagship station of AARA, the American Amateur Radio Association (www.K1MAN.com). K1MAN wished W1AW well and then QSYed to 14.272 MHz. to kick of K1MAN's new live call-in talk show with co-hosts Glenn at K1MAN and Karol at VE7KFM on the "left coast" of Canada (Hi). K1MAN is on the United States "right coast" (Hi). The call in number is 1-800-262-9543.

The kick off "show" was a huge success as the ARRL toy drive 3 KHz up was heavily promoted by both Glenn and Karol. During this "show" on 14.272 MHz., ND8V, enabled by K4ZDH, QRMed W1AW off of 14.275 MHz., an alleged criminal act under the Goldwater Law, Sections 333 and 501 of the 1934 Communications Act. ND8V is under the assumption that the Goldwater Law has been repealed (it has not) since ARRL dropped their listing this law in their FCC Rule Book in the early 1990s, another alleged criminal act itself, under the Goldwater Law, since de-listing of Sections 333 and 501 does give that false impression, doesn't it?. K4ZDH is also in alleged criminal violation of the Goldwater Law, of course, since he has repeatedly failed to discourage interference by hams to the K1MAN Amateur Information Bulletin Service heard on 14.275 MHz. since 1987 and just resumed yesterday after going off the air for IARN (International Amateur Radio Network) emergency traffic reasons on 4 July 2005.

Their is a rampant rumor going around in amateur radio circles that ND8V has requested to share his federal jail cell at Leavenworth with K4ZDH, known to his friends at the Commission at "Rot Riley" Hollingsworth the "K1MAN Killer." According to Glenn Baxter, K1MAN, Executive Director of AARA, there are no provisions in United States law for "vanity jail cells." Dave Sumner, K1ZZ, CEO of ARRL could not be reached for comment on this question and did not return any phone calls almost certainly made from K1TP, W5YI, and other ham radio reporters as this story broke on Thursday.

Glenn Baxter, K1MAN, said in an interview that:

"I certainly support waiving the rules in this case by allowing ND8V and K4ZDH to share jail cells after trial on purely humanitarian grounds. This, after all, is the holiday season, and radio amateurs should all pull together on this one and throw up, errr, throw their support for ND8V's behind, errr, throw their support BEHIND ND8V and K4ZDH." Ed. comment: Lay off the wine Glenn!

Chris Imlay, ARRL counsel, has advised, we believe, K1ZZ to invoke the Fifth Amendment since ARRL might also be criminally prosecuted in this case. Former Assistant U.S. Attorney Gail Fisk Malone is rumored to be considering a return to the Justice Department to personally handle this very high profile case. Gail, no doubt, has her eye on Hillery Clinton and the White House. Malone has neither confirmed nor denied that she is a presidential candidate nor that her running mate will be Wayne Green, W2NSD, who ran for Vice President at least once before. Wayne indicated to this reporter recently that he wants to reform education in the U.S., and, as Vice President, he would most certainly have his best chance to do this, in this reporter's opinion.

Glenn Baxter, K1MAN, has stated, again, that he IS NOT a candidate for President and that there WILL NOT be K1MAN Amateur Information Bulletins coming from the White House if he is:

"I am getting too old for politics, and my responsibilities at AARA and K1MAN are far to great at this time to even consider the White House. With Hollingsworth in jail, there would be no point. One FCC Commissioner will be as good as any other once we have put Rot Riley away," Mr. Baxter said.

Later in the day, W1AW and K1MAN re-established contact on 14.275 MHz. and were driven off the frequency by ND8V. Mr. Baxter stated:

"ND8V also drove me off of 14.275 MHz. while I was working G7BGY and 4Z4UN on December 14, 2005. There seems to be a pattern here. K3VR even E-mailed me yesterday that he has sent CD recordings of K1MAN to all FCC Commissioners. For the full text of little Brian's juvenile E-Mail see www.K1MAN.com, also attached below."

Today, in Washington, D.C., several FCC Commissioners were spotted walking around listening to Brian's MP3 recordings of K1MAN on their I-PODs, according to sources of questionable reliability, since all of the FCC is out on Christmas vacation and in Maine skiing with their kids now home from college.

"It is great that W1AW and K1MAN are working together now," Mr. Baxter said. "Tune in to the K1MAN live call-in talk show on 14.275 MHz.

plus or minus QRM, of course! Give us a call, even if it is only for a signal report or QSL request. Call 1-800-262-9543. The first show begins daily at about 11 A.M. EST, and the second program begins at about 2 P.M. EST. Join the fun!" 73 and GL de K1MAN

The previous bulletin by k1man is concrete proof that Baxter is now gone completely out-of-his-tree and needs to be locked up in a padded room along with the kook on 20M from Evansville IN.

by the way, I also don't know N8WWM personally or in any other way and Things aren't always what they seem.

Some of you probably thought that my email address was in reference to doesn't have anything at all to do with the recent presedential elections. It's in reference to something completely and entirely different.

Gee...I never had to worry about getting ANYthing "upgraded" to "Honorable"...It was that way all along.

There was a blatant lie.

Let's see you pony up those "statistics" from those psychologists, Frankie.

Published papers or reports?

I say you're just lying...Again...

Of course you're in "the same mold", Markie.

Both of you are lying. That's what Feeble Fivers do best.

Of course Frankie isn't functionally illiterate or careless with his written word like you are, but then a lie is a lie no matter how well presented it may appear.

President Jackson CB radio. Radio is used, I bought it on Ebay about two months ago. It transmits and receives just fine. However after being told the radio was 100%, when I received it, the 10khz button doesn't work, and the band selector is set to the C band. The band switch doesn't seem to do anything.
I'll sacrifice and sell it for $165 plus shipping. Photos available if needed.

Cobra 19Plus 40 channel combact mobile. Works great. $15.00 plus shipping.

Montgomery Ward 775, 40 channel mobile, works just fine. $15.00 plus shipping.

Uniden Pro350XL 40 channel portable CB with WX, scan, lockout, 9/19 button. Like new, very little use on this one. Unit is like new!!!! $20.00 plus shipping.

Now, without wishing to appear ignorant (which in all reality I am in this case) can anyone give me a SHORT paragraph about who this K1MAN is and how comes he gets so much type time in these forums? Being in Blighty is probably the reason I never heard of him until these postings but I think its not a bad idea to find out what all these postings and bad feelings are about.

Please don't go into too much detail and try to keep it accurate ;o)

You "heard" incorrect.

So you heard correctly, but what you were told was an untruth.
A judge is REQUIRED to follow the law. A judge may not indiscriminately dismiss such a case based on information that another committed the same offense.

I don't doubt you were told as much, but it's bunk.

The only facts here are 1) you were told as much and 2) apparently believe it.

Hearsay is not fact.

Try and stay out of trouble, convict.

Sorry Lee, Twist is right. The Judge can not throw out a case like this because the officer littered. If the judge wants to dismiss on for "in the interest of justice" fine, but I've been to court dozens of times for tickets over the past 30 years, never seen a case dismissed over the reasons like you're friend claims.

THE LIFE OF KAROL - 18 December 2005 - ES051218A - (draft)

by

Glenn Baxter, P.E., K1MAN
(written in the third person)

I have just finished word for word reading of The Life of Riley, including all footnotes, dated March, 2005. There are various and very serious defects in this otherwise very informative and basically correct document. Riley and ND8V need to go, but Karol feels that K1MAN will go instead. No so. K1MAN is too smart for Riley, ND8V, K3VR, AND Karol. K1MAN's weapon is the U.S. Constitution. For K1MAN this is child's play.

FIRST

The most serious fault regards the concept of "frequency ownership." The problem with Karol is that the Polish calling frequency on 14.273 MHz. came into conflict with K1MAN and IARN on 14.275 MHz. beginning in 1985 with IARN emergency operations and then in 1987 with K1MAN Amateur Information Bulletins. One main purpose of the information bulletins was to "establish" 14.275 MHz. as an emergency frequency so the contesters would not wipe out IARN emergency operations due to lack of knowledge. The Polish calling frequency on 14.273 MHz. is too close, and the logical thing to do would be to move to 14.272 MHz. or ask IARN (and the Bermuda Net, of course) to move to 14.276 MHz. Another idea would be to move the Polish calling frequency to 14.272.5 MHz. and ask IARN (and the Bermuda Net, of course) to move to 14.275.5 MHz.

I do remember some discussions with representatives from the Polish group, and their position seemed to be "We will not move, you move..." or something to that effect.

Now, the FCC rule of using the spectrum most efficiently kicks in. If IARN moved to 14.276 MHz., there would still be a problem with the Bermuda Net who opted to have K1MAN's license revoked with the eager assistance of ARRL instead of moving themselves or working out a mutually acceptable schedule. Etc. K1MAN has always tried to negotiate in good faith in order to be within the FCC rule of cooperating with respect to selection of frequency. It is hard for a bona fide bulletin station or a bona fide emergency organization with substantial track record (such as IARN) to come up short in such negotiations.

The smart thing for the Polish to do would be to slide down to 14.272 MHz. When K1MAN took two years off (to teach) from 14.725 MHz., ND8V and associates jumped from the "zoo" on 13.313 MHz. onto the 12 year K1MAN established 14.275 MHz., and the turf war began. Sorry, but ND8V was right. 14.273 MHz. IS too close to the more heavily occupied 14.275 MHz. (by more than one group). The Polish were outnumbered, and common sense still called for the Polish to slide down.

Recently, Karol tried to slide K1MAN to 14.274 MHz., just occupied nearby by ND8V on 14.273 MHz. ND8V was wrong to be on 14.273 MHz. (just as the Polish are wrong to be on 14.273 MHz.), and K1MAN would be wrong to slide to 14.274 MHz. Two wrongs don't make a right, and Karol should realize that such poor practive by K1MAN could easily be translated (in the current K1MAN/FCC legal environment) to criminal proseedings against K1MAN by "Rot Riley" Hollingsworth, FCC Special Counsel. Was Karol also sick on the day they taught law at law school?

The "Life of Riley" asks Hollingsworth to get into a juvenile frequency dispute turf battle which "Rot Riley" played to the hilt with his campaign against K1MAN (with IARN, AARA, and information bulletins barley mentioned at all by Karol - what's with that?). Sure, Riley is corrupt, and sure, ND8V is "enabled" by Riley to break the law, Mike's reward for his cooperation to nab K1MAN. Same deal was implemented with KV4FZ. Then KV4FZ was dumped into the fire (with WB2OTK and K1MAN, almost!) just as ND8FZ will be dumped into the fire with K1MAN is Riley has his way; he won't.

Karol mixes his issues and the net result is his Polish friends are involved with something that could have been avoided years ago by sliding down to 14.272 MHz. where his war with bigot ND8V could be easily won, hands down.

SECOND

Karol is very "anti American," it seems. He has stated to me that he does not care about the U.S. Constitution, something I would gladly die to protect. (Blood is thicker than water!) Bad image for Karol if he want to constructively and therefore effectively criticise the U.S. We can take it; we need it actually! Also, ethnic slurs against "Red Necks" and "Stupid Land" and how dumb ALL Americans are is not too smart as far as amateur radio public relations goes, but Canadians are not too smart, are they? Hi! See what I mean? That stung didn't it?. Such generalizations are taken quite seriously by many if not most. How about "All Canadians are stupid" or "All Pollak's are stupid." Ouch! See what I mean?

THIRD

Personal attacks (weight, mental problems, intelligence, etc.) against anyone is always a sign that you are losing your fight. Not a winning strategy, in my view.

FOURTH

Karol needs to define his goal or goals. These are quite unclear to me. Two good goals would be to move the Polish to 14.272 MHz. and not be harassed there plus to constructively criticise America; we welcome a Devil's advocate. I welcome it anyway. If Karol wants to "nix" the U.S., he will lose. We have the aircraft carriers, remember? Sam and John Adams and company set up a pretty powerful group down here in Amarica, and we are not done yet!

FIFTH

Karol should reign in his "potty mouth" on amateur radio. It makes him, his military college, Poland, and Canada look very bad. His childish references to "sucking" or otherwise "doing" Riley in the bath house are illegal here in the U.S. and that would be more than enough for Riley to issue a Notice of Forfeiture and win big, big, big against K1MAN if Glenn did likewise. Make no mistake, I say that Riley is a cheap and corrupt polition playing ND8V like a grand piano, and what he does in the "bath house" is not relevant, of course.

This is America. Anything goes. Market forces sort it all out. The current market forces dictate that potty mouth on amateur radio and national television is out. Even Janet Jackson's bare boob is out. The ancient Egyptians flaunted their boobs all the time. It is great to be a king, isn't it? Hi, of course.

ND8V and K3VR were dealt on air mortal blows om 16 and 17 December 2005. The pen is mightier than the sword!!!!!!!!!!!!!!! Both can recover if they are smart. I still have hopes for ND8V. I am afraid that K3VR and Riley are toast, however. They are going down.

FINALLY

Karol can do better and fix things by acting better in public. His intellect and wit are awesome. Clean it up, Karol, define your goals, and we can make one hell of a difference in both amateur radio and in the lives of all of our listeners. The latter (and the new talk show) has the very real possibility of becoming huge and blowing both the FCC (rather Riley and his FCC support), K3VR, ARRL (and ND8V) right out of the water. Carpe diem!

Trying to set me up for a weapons conflict with the government here at K1MAN might be aimed at illustrating your anti gun Canadian view, however, our Constitution prohibits advocating the overthrow of our government by force. Not very smart, Karol! Also, this plays right into the hands of Brian, the fraudulent Crow.

I have all the tools I need right in our Constitution to beat those punks, hands down. We Americans are not as stupid as you suggest. You are not as smart as you think. I am playing at Level I, Riley is at Level II, Brian is at Level III, and you are at a distant Level IV. If you really think I am "going down," as you say, then you are at Level V or posibly as low as Level XX.

I think you are all wound up with anti American sentiments and it is clouding your judgment. Come down and sit in my chair for a day and see just how smart you really are! You would go down, and hard, here on our U.S. playing field, and fast. Yes, you have "free" health care but no aircraft carriers. Your kids and adults are not in Iraq. Good for you. We will gladly let you switch roles with us, old pal from the North! We don't plan to let punks like Hitler and Stalin (or Saddam, or anyone else) gang rape our mothers!

Don't like America? Just wait and let us hang ourselves if you really think we are THAT stupid. When we run out of fossil fuel we will all freeze anyway. eh? Except those in "stupid land!"

What is the proportion of Black amateur radio licencees to Whites?

How does it correspond to the same proportion in the population as a whole?

I don't believe that information is required on an application.
Therefore it should be un-obtainable.

That percentage must be rising now thanks to the M3/CB'ers licence as so many Hams class it. Before I would say it was very low as it doesn't involve shooting people, stealing mugging or raping. Now it takes no effort there will be plenty of them using the radios to co-ordinate robberies and gangland shootings... yeeee haaaaah good buddy.....

So what's wrong with being racist? Why let your neighbourhood turn into a shithole.....

I agree, been to court on a number of occasions. As a teen I racked up 23 parking tickets at one time. Went to court several times as I had no money to pay them. The last time I got arrested for said tickets. I asked the judge to just put me in jail. He asked how long I was in the holding cell, I told him 36 hours, and he said time served. This goes to show the judge can be lenient, but has to uphold the law at all times.

in my experence the number of blacks hams is sabout half the population numbers but YMMV

just for the halibut I have noticed the hispanic hams seem to in line with population pretty well, asians seem a bit over the popualtion numbers, and women are way off less in proportion than blacks, Blakc women hams though seem relitively more numors than to balck males and white women to white males

those are my experences as i said YMMV hating the fact I will now sound like bill Clinton but that depends on the maeing of the word "anomaly" but K1man seems to be bit further out than most hams although I am not certain any of this stuff published as if it were his is in fact his many hams hate him so much they will say anything about him but ham that nuts are common we have K4YZ that states lying on the interent is child abuse and pedophilia, and that anyone who disagress with him is a homosexual Dave who says their is nothing wrong with Knowing help other to break thier own laws if he can claim DXCC credit in the process. N2ey who seems to recite the whole histoory of Ham radio QSO by QSO in answer to question, and that is just here on RRAP wether this mean K1Man is an anomoly in your eyes or not I realy can't say but I'll report you decide at least a quarter of hams seem to prsent some real ego problems

The judge did, and that's a fact regardless of what twist may think. Did the judge make an error in dismissing the case, maybe. The person never did tell me the exact reason why the case was dismissed but from their recollection of the events in court it seems it was due to the officer littering as well.

I've been to traffic court myself once or twice for tickets and I've seen people have tickets dismissed even after admitting they did it with a reasonable explanation. One thing you'll find is no case is ever a slam-dunk, the judge has a lot more latitude in what they can do than you may think. The last ticket I got was for sliding in to the back of somebody's pickup truck on a snow covered icy road one night. The officer that wrote me the ticket "advised" me to take it to court, which I did, and the officer didn't show so it was automatically dismissed. How nice of him not to show up. 8-))

You "heard" incorrect.

>No.

So you heard correctly, but what you were told was an untruth.
A judge is REQUIRED to follow the law.

No, he is NOT.

"The general rule is that an unconstitutional statute, though having the form and name of law, is in reality no law, but is wholly void, and ineffective for any purpose; since unconstitutionality dates from the time of it's enactment, and not merely from the date of the decision so branding it... No one is bound to obey an uncontitutional law, and no courts are bound to enforce it."

-- 16 Am Jur 2d, Sec 177 late 2d, Sec 256

A judge may not indiscriminately dismiss such a case based on information that another committed the same offense.

The reason i post at the top is that I am a blind person and get tired of having to listen to what everyone wrote. If you had ot use a screen reader you would understand. I lived in the ritch section of macon, but they called it that for some reason.

I'll save you the time Zoomtext takes to get to the bottom...

I'd get a 706 if they had better intermod rejection. One guy that has one has to go to the input to hear me when he gets close to me.
The BMF tower I have for a neighbor kills most radios. I've had to sell all my Radio Shack stuff. I can't hear anything. An IC-2100 works good here. I still want 6 meters! Oh well, I'll have a killer 10 meter setup when CW goes bye-bye. Those last two tests are easy.

Cooltube. Occasionally I see something he is offering that I might want, but I refuse to bid on anything that spammer sells. He ranks up

If I could killfile someone, it would be cooltube, not John.

More than once you have told us you are blind (That if you aren't lying). If your looking for the sympathy vote you aren't going to get it especially using the language you do.
Also, why do you think your superior to people that aren't blind? If they had the same defect that you have they would also have computers geared up to their disability.
So then, have you been blind from birth or is it a recent thing? And what software do you run for text to speech?

What I would like to know is if he uses an agent to convert speech to text or does he actually attempt to touch type? If he uses an agent I wonder how come it does typo's? If he touch types then fair enough. At least he isn't as dyslexic as an_old_friend.

You really do have a truck driver fetish.

The holidays must be especially tough for you doug, afterall you declared yourself indigent and were forced by the court to see a shrink and find a job, after your felony conviction. Do you give your kids government surplus cheese for Christmas?

You're quite confused. Since when was the charge of littering ever found to be unconstitutional?

(snip)

See above. You may be confusing yourself with jury nullification. In any event, littering was never found to be unconstitutional.

That would be correct if this littering law was found unconstitutional.

Doubt it had anything to do with the officer littering. Most likely he didn't prove his case or the information on the ticket concerning the violation wasn't good enough to convict.

Agreed, but I have been there faaarrrr more times then you, I've never heard a case dismissed because the officer did a separate violation.
Using that logic, every cop speeding to catch a jay walker, speeder is guilty. How about running a red light without a siren while responding to a call? You can not dismiss a case because the officer did something wrong while doing the performance of his duties. The only way that would happen, is it had a direct bearing innocence or guilt on the case to which he's involved.

Just for your information just because the cop doesn't show in court doesn't mean an automatic dismissal. The judge has the option to simply reschedule the court hearing. Most of the time the case is dismissed but don't bet on it.

How long does it take to cold smoke? What exactly is cold smoke?

PLL for Phase lock loop. In the late 1970's, the PLL was able to replace crystals for changing CB frequencies.

The 8719 is one of the versions of it.

Picked up a home built linear with 2 of the above pills. It doesn't work and I've replaced both pills. Obviously its hard to troubleshoot it without a schematic but just on the off chance someone may have experience with something akin to this what else should i look for?
ground appears ok as well as ant center conductor isn't shorted to ground.

Cold smoke is where you generate smoke without much heat. It doesn't cook the food just smoke it. Great for making home made bacon. The one I use is a smoke pistol.
I just mounted it on the side of my brinkman smoker.
http://www.smokepistol.com

It generates smoke for 2 or 3 hours..

And Cherry is the best, esp for Turkey or Chicken..

That ain't bad at all. I thought it would be like 9 hours. What if it's like 25 degrees out? I am asking because I still BBQ in winter.

Those are VHF rated transistors. Does it have the traditional BB matching xformers or is it TRF circuits?

If I hot smoke a turkey, which is heat with smoke, a turkey can take 8 to 9 hours. My smoker runs about 250 degrees, with a water bath under it. If I cold smoke it, you still have to bake it in an oven for the same amount of time as a regular turky. The only problem I have with cold weather is the output of my smoke pistol plugging up with condensed smoke.

Yeah there is a relay. I thought about that but there isn't any identifying marks to tell me what it is. I cant come up with a schematic but when i get my Sony Mavica working I will post a pic on my web site.
Sorry to be so oblique but this thing is a mystery.

Tuned Radio Frequency.

The input and output circuits are fixed in one small range.
Capacitors and inductors only have certain values at certain frequencies. At others, the match is very poor.

Maybe the amp is designed for another frequency.

Amps with broadband matching transformers will work over serveral decades of range. Most active devices will output more at lower frequencies.

It was designed for 11 meters as I have used it with great success. It would xmit the roger beep but no audio.

Hi, I am looking to build an antenna for CB band... It will be going up in my attic with about a 19 foot ceiling. I would like to have it free standing as I have no way to get to the top to hang a wire type antenna...

here is what I was thinking of doing:

I was going to biuld a 1/2 dipole but out of 1/2" copper pipe using PVC pipe as insulators for the center and bottom and building some kind of wood base for it.

will this work the same as a 12g wire dipole? do I still make each side 8' 5" long or will this change? Does it matter what side is up? any tips or ideas?

thanks
Jim

Don't waste your money on copper pipe. 12 or 14 gauge wire will work just fine.

You can also build a 1/4 ground plane, and stick it on a 9 or 10 foot mast.

Smells good just posting about it. I have not given smoking a try yet. Most of the stuff I have eaten that has been smoked, has been at someone elses house.
But those smoke/BBQ restaurants are gold in my book.

Jim,

Here is the site for the homemade 1/4 ground plane. The pipe would work better here. So would rigid solid copper wire. I think this is a better option for local talking. The dipole would work better for DX.

Whatever you do, keep it the hell away from any kind of romex or AC wiring. It will induce some noise. I had a similar problem because of that. But you are better off with a 19 foot attic. Get the antenna tip to the top of the roof.

LMAO!!! It been at least 10 years since I hunted Goose. You got that right on the grease part, damn greasy, but save that stuff. It's much better to use than cooking oils.
Sorry to say but doing a 22lb deep fried. Got the propane tank filled, fired everything up, we're ready to rock. Going to brine it in with salt, brown sugar, onion, sliced orange, bourbon.
Got my home made sourdough stuffing and Yukon gold smashed potatoes, rest is being brought by the family.

Have a great Christmas!!!!!!!!!!

The unbalanced 1/4 wave GP will match to the CB better then a balanced dipole.

Coax is unbalanced. It's a hot and a shield. Dipoles need equal and opposite feed.

You need about 8.6 feet per element.

http://www.monsterfm.com/engineering/antcalc.htm

I built the yagi at arrl.org, 7db for 7 bucks.
Works damn good for being made of coat hangers and a 1x2!

I tried to build CB antennas. They are BIG. 2 meter antennas are much smaller.
VHF-FM has much better local range then 11 meters. I use part 95 and 97 all the time.

I may have to try one of these for 2 meters and another for 430 MHz ATV.
http://www.softcom.net/users/kd6dks/quad.html

Yagis are simpler to build, but I'm told quads have better gain.
Quagis have quad feeds and yagi elements. I need to bug Jay for some good matches for coax to balanced feed units.

Another ham mentioned that the shorter director is capacitive and the longer reflector is inductive. The lead/lag of the elements causes the waves to constructively add in one direction more then others.

If it transmits the roger beep then its not the amp. Sounds like the radio has a modulation problem.

If you ask that to a few of the Amateurs lurking about in the Newsgroups then the answer from them would be an emphatic yes it does matter, followed by the same old "lowering of standards" and "m3/brain dead cb'ers" "Lazy Asses" etc etc.

That's not from me btw, I take people as I find them, I was simply curious.

We need to find out what he is going to use it for. I would probably go with the 1/4 GP mounted on a PVC mast. That would be about 8 feet off his attic floor.
Might work pretty well.

I has a Starduster in the attic in 1983, and did OK. This will work better that the Starduster.

Well,
its 23rd Dec just after Eastenders and there's only just over a day to go..... before we are woken up ridiculously early by screaming excited kids, trundling around like a heard of Elephants, the Mrs screaming how the Christmas Turkey isn't cooked because someone accidentally turned off the oven, relatives making themselves at home in your living room, tons and tons of wrapping paper, packaging and toys scattered everywhere in the excitement to open the next prezzie, overall disappointment because everyone overlooked your hints for a nice new radio and got you socks and slippers..... gah... why do we do it.....
Because we wouldn't have it any other way ;o)

Look after yourselves this Christmas and have a wonderful New year,

Merry X-mas,

Crap. Sorry about that. Usethe 1/4 ground plain.

http://home.att.net/~wizardoz/cbmw/antenna_fabri.html#groundp

Remember to cut the center radial long, and trim shorter to adjust SWR. Mount it on a plastic mast like PVC or ABS. It does not have to be metal since it's indoors, and there is no wind ot weather. Get the tip as high as possible.

Also, use a 1:1 balun so the coax doesn't radiate. Basically, that is a fancy term for coiled coax, which should be place just before the feedpoint.

Here is a site to help:

http://www.hamuniverse.com/balun.html

When I built mine, I used two PVC 4 inch couplers glued together. And I wrapped the coax around it, tying it down with ty-raps. If you need pictures, I can send them. The purpose of this coil is to choke RF so the coax does not act as a ground radial or part of the antenna. That is also why it's place as close to the feed as possible.

AT LAST! A reasonable plan for America to bring home the troops!

1) "The US will apologize to the world for our "interference" in their affairs, past & present. You know, Hitler, Mussolini, Stalin, Tojo, Noriega, Milosevic, Hussein, and the rest of those "good ole boys", we will never "interfere" again.

2) We will withdraw our troops from all over the world, starting with Germany, South Korea, the Middle East, and the Philippines. They don't want us there. We would station troops at our borders. No one allowed sneaking through holes in the fence.

3) All illegal aliens have 90 days to get their affairs together and leave.We'll give them a free trip home. After 90 days the remainder will be gathered up and deported immediately, regardless of whom or where they are.
They're illegal!!! France will welcome them.

4) All future visitors will be thoroughly checked and limited to 90 days unless given a special permit!!!! No one from a terrorist nation will be allowed in. If you don't like it there, change it yourself and don't hide here.

Asylum would never be available to anyone. We don't need any more cab drivers or 7-11 cashiers.

5) No foreign "students" over age 21. The older ones are the bombers. If they don't attend classes, they get a "D" and it's back home baby.

6) The US will make a strong effort to become self-sufficient energy wise.
This will include developing nonpolluting sources of energy but will require a temporary drilling of oil in the Alaskan wilderness. The caribou will have to cope for a while.

7) Offer Saudi Arabia and other oil producing countries $10 a barrel for their oil. If they don't like it, we go someplace else. They can go somewhere else to sell their production. (About a week of the wells filling up the storage sites would be enough.)

8) If there is a famine or other natural catastrophe in the world, we will not "interfere." They can pray to Allah or whomever, for seeds, rain, cement or whatever they need. Besides most of what we give them is stolen or given to the army. The people who need it most get very little, if anything.

9) Ship the UN Headquarters to an isolated island someplace. We don't need the spies and fair weather friends here. Besides, the building would make a good homeless shelter or lockup for illegal aliens.

10) All Americans must go to charm and beauty school. That way, no one can call us "Ugly Americans" any longer. The Language we speak is ENGLISH...learn it...or LEAVE...Now, isn't that a winner of a plan?

"The Statue of Liberty is no longer saying "Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses." She's got a baseball bat and she's yelling, 'you want a piece of me?' "

I don't think so, only because I have seen flat ground planes. My Starduster were at a sharp angle. Maybe Scott can knows better. I would think the flat or GP at 90 degrees to the center conductor is fine.

BTW, since you are running it indoors, use Belden 9913 coax. It is more flexible than LMR400 or such.

I don't like him for four years like he wants but he did lead the AL in ERA last season. He was an inning eater but the Tribe rarely gave him any run support so his W-L record is major skewed. A two year deal would be great but he pitched on a one year under-paid contract last season to prove his arm was OK, so now he's ready to get paid.

The Tribe signed Paul Byrd recently so that will be all they can afford in starting pitchers this year.

I learned to drive with a 70 Challenger RT running a 383 with a 4 speed.
It wasn't your usual transportation special kids get for their first car. Clutch friction plates and tires didn't last long on that thing. It was hard not to squeal the tires a bit in first when letting out the clutch without letting it slip a lot. I hated to drive in the winter, the car was way too light in the back end, and way too nose heavy, thus getting stuck in the snow was a problem.

Those are beautiful cars man, I'm surprised you drove it in the winter.
What color was it, and was it the pistol grip shifter?

Those uni-bodies are light and quick, I always liked the body lines on the Challengers', was it your car? That's a hell of a machine to learn on.

Straight radials would create a 30 ohm antenna.
45 degree droops create about 50 ohms.

There shouldn't be any current flowing down the outside of the shield with a groundplane, so you won't need a balun, unlike a dipole that requires equal and opposite phases.
If you try to feed a dipole with coax, the outer shield becomes part of the antenna system, causing high SWR readings, (even if the SWR is low), RF interference and degraded performance.

How come I use to see both during the CB era? Radio Shack made a ground plane with straight radials.

The radio works fine. In fact one of the frequent posters on this ng (other than myself obviously) now uses it. Its definitely the amp.

JJ said he was intruiged by the Jets, right before he took the Fish job. Woody is not concerned about the team. He just wants a stadium.

Since Walt Michaels was coach, the Jets have only hired one established head coach, which was Parcells. Every other coach was a damn assistant, usually an unproven one.

This team needs great talent evaluators, like JJ or Vermiel. We have a shit scouting system.

Belichick was an assistant at the time, and a failure in Cleveland. He was a failure in NE, too, until Mo Lewis helped him discover Tom Brady.

1/4 wavelength is resonant to spread most of the power into the air (or even into vacuum). Any multiple length of 1/4 wavelength works as well.

Explainig why 1/4 wavelength is resonant is just another thingy....

You can use allmost any mechanical length. By adding a coil or a capacitor you can make it resonant electrically.
Lengths under one full wavelength will provide a somewhat near ground radiation diagram. Longer antennas are directional towards the antenna tip. This is not that good for vertical antennas other you want your signal going to mars.

There are some special constructions like cophased antennas or multiple dipoles in one unit. These antennas provide some to much gain over simple verticlas as the radiation diagram flattens the diagram of radiated power down to earth so that less radiated power goes out to space. These antenna constructions can have the length of 1 to 5 (or even more) full wavelengths.

Please excuse my bad and very simple english.
Season greetings from Berlin/ Germany.

thank you for the quick answer, however this is not true that any resonant of the 1/4 wave length will give the same performance like the normal 1/4 wave length antenna because for longer antennas the current that runs through the antenna will start from the 1/4 wavelength of the antenna and will go up as well as down with an opposite phase thus decreasing the total current of the antenna.

If you can think of another reason way they build such antennas I will be happy to know

Thanks again
Tomer

You must not compare pure radiated power to performance/ gain.
A 1/4 wave allways needs some ground or radials to perform reasonably good by going 80% of the radiated power to mars as of high angle radiation. This is somewhat useful in areas with high buildings with the repeaters on top surrounding your place but not in rural areas.
A 1/2 wave vertical is much less affected by surrounding things (at last your own body) within a 1/4 wave distance of the antenna and a 3/4 antenna has much lower radiation angle than the others. So real performance is a very complex thing.
Those theoretical antennas in outer space vacuum are not really comparable to the different conditions a cell-phone antenna has to work.

But... If you are so well educated why do you ask such 'simple' things in a cb-group?
Even most radio-amateurs could not answer your question.
You may buy that ARRL Antenna Handbook for further information on antennas of all kind.
Also you may use an antenna simulation program like EZnec to see how real antennas perform.

A lot of people stick to the old ways. I type as the post appears. If someone top posts it's silly to bottom post as the message jets jumbled up. Also if someone's following a text its easier to just read the new bit every time rather than having to scroll to the bottom as many in here have no ability in the cut and snip department. I normally bottom post but as I say, horses for courses.

The radio shack GP w/ horizontal radial worked but had higher SWR than the starduster with it's drooping radials. Have you considered using an old 102" SS whip mounted on drooping radials that you would construct? The drooping radials would allow for an almost perfect 1:1 SWR match but include the spring since the vertical element needs to be 108" long. This antenna would essentialy be a starduster.

Lowering the ground radials from 90 degrees to the main radiator to 45 degrees helps to rasie feed impendance.

Feed impendance and antenna tuning are interactive with each other. If you have to keep them at 90 degrees,then you will have to adjust the length of the radiator.

At 30 Ohms you will need some matching network to cancel the reactive portion out and rasie the radiation resistance of the antenna up to that of 50 Ohms. I would not reccomend direct coax attachment even to a 1/4 lambda ground plane antenna.

As for efficiency somewhat similar. The two will have entirely

Can he make a longer radiating element and put the radials at 90 degrees? That

So what reactive component does a 1/4 wave monopole have? How much loss do I have on my 40 meter 1/4 wave vertical fed directly with RG-8 coax? Should I put a coil or capacitor at the feedpoint of my vertical?

He's talking about mounting his dipole vertical. How different is the Ok, I just ran my 40 meter vertical on a simulator...

R=35.87 jX=.354

SWR=1.39.. now why do I need a matchbax?

But of course a matchbox wont raise the radiation resistance of my antenna... will it?

A 1/4 wave has a high angle of radiation.

If you look closely at a cellular antenna, it's two 1/4 waves with a phasing coil between them. As explained above, this concentrates the power to a lower angle.

857 MHz is about 3.03 inches for a quarterwave.
I've built antennas for our local 800MHZ public service band.

Nor will it fix the basic mismatch.

30 ohms. Oh shit! I better put a 20 ohm resistor is series with my radio of it's gonna' burn up!

1.5:1 SWR can be 25 or 100 ohms.
25 ohms will draw more current and drop more voltage. (more current X less voltage)
100 ohms will draw less current and drop the voltage less. (less current X more voltage) 50 ohms will draw the most amount of POWER from the source. (equal voltage X equal current = MAX POWER TRANSFER)

James, you need to learn the power transfer theorum and how little is actually lost by a 1.5:1 or less SWR. You gain more with a resonant antenna, then a bit of impedance mismatch.

Resonance occurs due to the physical lenght of the radiator plus any coils minus any capacitance. The electrical match is due to the feedpoint impedance. An odd quarterwave has a low impedance. Anything else has a higher impedance. To match 50 ohm unbalanced coax to various types of antennas, baluns and beta/delta/gamma matches were created.

Some antenna designs have the radials at 90 degrees because that is where the designer put them to work properly with their design.

Why would a 1/4 wave length be ideal? If your instructor insists

Okay. Take the matchbox and put it on the shelf. FIrst off I never said a matchbox but an matching network. Unless you put the matchbox at the feed point, a matchbox is not a matching network. A matchbox inserted in the trransmission line acts far different than that of a matching network at the feed. Then with any basic knowledge of electronic circuits should reveal that.

A gamma match, beta match, and even simple load elements like a capcitor or an inductor will facillitate matching. Yes a matching network can be used to cancel out the reactive portion and transform the load resistive component to an appropriate level in which maximum power can be transfered.

Basic electronics. A simple circuits problem that does not need any fancy smancy computer model to figure out the solutions.

Scott.

A 1.5:1 SWR means that about 4% of the source power is reflected back from the load. This is entirely different from antenna efficiency and how much delivered power is actually radiated. Again your understanding of antenna efficeincy and radiated power density is quite lacking.

A resonant antenna is just that, a resonant antenna. It will often give the widest possible bandwidth for SWR and radiation efficiency.
That is all. Physically short or exceptionaly long antenna can be made to operate over a small frequency bandwidth with equal or better radiation efficiency. For example consider electrically short loop antenna can be as efficient as 98% in radiation. Due to their low radiation resistance the antenna is quite high in Q. Thus a relatively small bandwidth for efficient radiation.

SWR is the measure of power delivered to the load and what is reflected back from the load to the source. Nothing more, nothing less. It is a measure of what is happening inside the transmission line. Not necessarily the performance of the antenna. Just because you have a 1:1 SWR does not mean that all the power is being radiated. In fact in some installations as little a 10% is actually being radiated.
The rest is heat.

Lancer there is only one real solution for an antenna that will match a 50 Ohm feedline. That is when the antenna is 50 + j0 Ohms. Or 50 Ohms resistive. There are an infinite number of complex solutions that will yield a magnitude of 50 Ohms impedance. What solution yours is will be totally unique to your location and installation. No way for me to predict that. Therefore there is no way that I can predict y our losses. Either from load reflections as well as radiation efficiency of your antenna. Then again if the magnitude of the imedance of your antenna is 30 Ohms then you may choose to live with the reflections in the transmission line as well as any looses due to inefficiency do to the actual radiation resistance what ever it is for your installation.

Loss in an antenna, that is radiation efficiency, is dependant on the radiation resistance of the antenna. This also sets the Q or quality factor of the antenna. That is the bandwidth in which there is reasonably efficiency of the antenna (>70.7%).

Actually a coil or capacitor is best inserted in the radiator. Choice of base load or loads at other locations are for another discussion. The reactive component value will mainly depend on the physical length of the radiator and its reference to lambda.

Gee I seem to have lost that in the translation.

Even still the two will have different radiation patterns depending on how high the vertical mounting of the 1/2 lambda antenna is about virtual ground.

The only time an antenna is resonant is when the feed impendance is real. That is when the imaginary portion of the antenna is zero.
Therefore the feed point impendance is R + j0. Resonance does not have to occur at 50 + j0 Ohms.

There are an infinite solution to where the magnitude of the impedance is equal to a magnitude of 50 Ohms.

I would have thought by now he would have either noticed or been told about his spelling mistakes as he duplicates it every time he posts the same old guff.

I always thought 1/4 length was easier because you can make one easily from 1/1 length by breaking in half exactly two times.
And then you have 4, so more economic too.

Anyone have pics of their mobile antenna mounting system. Just bought a Monkey made and I have a Ford Explorer 2001. I am going to build a mount that spans my roof rack and I'd like to hear from others who have done similar stuff.

Thanks,

Get a big, heavy duty mount, and drill a hole!

You may need to add a reinforcing plate if that antenna has a lot of wind load and the metal is thin. Maybe you can drill through some support added to the roof. My seven foot Firestik is mounted to my metal bumper using a Francis heavy duty stud, model M-102.

I've had them stay using the Radio Shack stud, but they don't sell them anymore. The Firestik dome mounts suck! Had 2 separate on me.

A dipole is made from two quarterwaves. An odd quarterwave is easy to match to. Any other length needs a matching network of some kind. Gain comes about from directing the RF in some directions. This can be one direction like a beam, or omnidirectional with something more complicated then a simple quarterwave antenna.

Tell your instructor he needs some more instruction.

That said it will probably be a nice collectors piece for someone.

Just received from Ofcom...

<quote>
The Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) has launched a consultation on proposals to introduce fixed penalty fines for certain offences committed under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949.

The consultation, which is being run by the DTI rather than Ofcom, seeks views on the type of offence for which Fixed Penalty Notices may be imposed and the level of fine to be paid.

Wireless Telegraphy Act offences are currently prosecutable under criminal law. The DTI's proposals, if adopted, would enable summary-only offences (which currently carry a maximum penalty of six months imprisonment and/or a &#65533;5,000 fine) to be settled by way of a Fixed Penalty Notice procedure. Offences would include, for example, operating a transmitter without a licence where one is required, operating outside of the conditions of a licence, or operating outside of the conditions that allow exemption from the need for a licence.
</quote>

More information:
http://www.dti.gov.uk/consultations/consultation-1573.html
PDF document download:
http://www.dti.gov.uk/consultations/files/publication-1574.pdf

As the documents says,
"We would welcome suggestions of others who may wish to be involved in this consultation process"
I would guess that anyone can respond. The document does specify that illegal use of CB will be covered by this proposed fixed penalty.

Happy new year.

Peter.

The folllowing is from the URL: http://www.fuckchristmas.org/

This is a F-N MASTERPIECE. ENJOY you mother-fucking assholes. (grin)

Oh man, fuck Christmas.

Seriously – are you kidding me with this “There’s a war on Christmas” bullshit? FOX News wasn’t raking in enough cash already from all the Christmas commercials for Kill ‘em All Barbie and Girls Gone Wild Brand Toddler Gear? They had to start publishing books about some bogus attack on Christianity? And who did they pick to lead this particular charge?

John fucking Gibson. This guy has wiener written all over him.

Bill O’Reilly gets all the credit as the biggest nutcase in FOXville, but Gibson really deserves his own special wing in the happy house. This motherfucker’s embedded assignment reads “Up Karl Rove’s ass.”

What makes him such a dick? I mean, besides making a fortune by screaming hysterically about how oppressed Christians are by the other twenty percent? How about advocating bombing countries that don’t vote the way we want in their own elections? Way to encourage democracy, fuckhead. And maybe he was kidding when he wished, on air, that the French had gotten the 2012 Olympics instead of the Brits so the terrorists would “blow up Paris,” but it might have been just a touch over the top to call for it again on the day of the London train bombings. Classy move, asshole.

And really? That’s just scratching the fucking surface. Anyone remember who was responsible for the bombing of the Federal building in Oklahoma City? John does: Iraq. And speaking of Iraq, Gibson thinks Rove deserves a fucking medal for outing that CIA agent. And, like any good reporter, he wanted to burn the Florida ballots after his buddy Bush got “elected” rather than, I don’t know, count them? “Is this a case where knowing the facts actually would be worse than not knowing?” That right there is why sometimes it’s useful for journalists to go to, what do you call that fucking place? Oh yeah, journalism school.

And now he's all worked up about Christmas being stolen. What is this, the fucking Fairytale Network? It's a national fucking holiday and we're spending gobs of our hard-earned tax dollars on wreaths and lights for your special Santa day. But these bastards are all "But they call them Holiday trees!" Here's a clue: no, they fucking don't. Ok, maybe in a couple places, like on FOXNews.com and at the White House, but if Christmas is under attack, I'm Kris fucking Kringle.

And guess who's stealing Christmas, according to Gibson. Go on — guess. "A cabal of secularists, so-called humanists trial lawyers, cultural relativists, and liberal, guilt-wracked Christians — not just Jewish people." (Emphasis mine. Pure, unadulterated anti-semitism, his.) A cabal? Are you fucking kidding me? Could we try to be a little more fucking original with our Jew-hating?

Speaking of Jew-hating, Pat Buchanan has joined the hype-a-thon of the supposed Attack on Christmas, too. Or, as he put it, "What we're witnessing here are hate crimes against Christianity." Sorry? We're not so hot on paying for an inflatable camel for your goddamn nativity scene and suddenly we're Slobodan fucking Milosevic? Fuck you. Get some goddamn perspective, you little prick. When they start hunting Christians in the streets, it'll be time to start yelling "Hate crime." And no, it won't count when they start chasing you with the torches. That'll be called "The Most Wonderful Time of the Year."

And Bill O'Reilly, Gibson's cellmate in the silly shack, is doing his part to save Christmas, too. He's been going after New York's Mayor Bloomberg (that Commie) because he says the Christmas Tree at Rockefeller Center has been renamed a "Holiday Tree," and "No Christian Christmas symbols are allowed in the public schools." The only problem? Neither of those things is even remotely fucking true.

It takes some super-sized balls for O'Reilly to get all lathered up about sinners and their fictional anti-Christian crusade. Every fucking person on the planet has hard and fast evidence that Bill is a world-class pervert, but still he feels totally justified lecturing the rest of us on our moral inferiority.

How fucked up is Bill O'Reilly? Pretty fucked up. Everyone got so crazyfaced about him confusing a sponge and a Middle Eastern snackcake (pretty fucking funny, mind you), that they missed the scary bit: what he meant to say. Old Bill wanted to get all funky on his intern like this: (you'll excuse my foul language, I'm quoting an award-winning newscaster here) "I'd take the other hand with the [loofah] thing and put it on your pussy."

loofah (lū'fə) noun. A natural exfoliating sponge.

exfoliate (ĕks-fō'lē-āt') verb. To remove (a layer of bark or skin, for example) in flakes or scales; peel.

That's right. Bill O'Reilly, fount of morals, is super familiar with the female anatomy. So much so, that he knows how good it feels to have one's pussy exfoliated. We're talking h – o – t, Hot.
That's exactly who I'm going to for my life lessons.

Sorry, where were we? Oh yeah, fuck Christmas.

Can we back up just a couple steps here? At what point did a basic understanding of the separation of church and state become a fucking war on religion?
And how did we get to the point where you can call an organization set up to defend our civil liberties "Terrorists" on national television and no one fires your ass? Enough. Fuck all of you lying little shitheads who wish the world was out to get you so you could play the poor oppressed victims. Wake up assholes — you're the cowboys, not the fucking Indians.

"But we want to display our Christmas tree on city property!"
You can, go right ahead. "They're stopping us from praying in school!" They're not, so fuck off. "We're not allowed to say 'Merry Christmas' anymore!" Are you fucking kidding me? Knock yourself out. Say it at work, scream it in your high school lunch room, hell, tattoo it on your fucking g-ddammed slooped forehead for all we care.
Guess who's gonna be there defending your right to do every one of those things? The fucking ACLU. One of these days you bastards are going to drive those fuckers out of business, and then you'll see some actual attacks on your religious liberties. I thought conservatives were supposed to be all proud and independent?
When did they turn into a bunch of fucking crybabies?

Let's back up even fucking further, shall we?
Can anyone tell me how old Christmas is? Anyone?
Two thousand years, give or take, right? Gee, who's been reading their No Child Left Behind History Textbooks?
Try fucking four thousand years. Huh. Twice as fucking long as your little baby king has been around. How could that possibly be, unless. . . waitaminute. . .

Christmas isn't fucking Christian. Ok, now we're talking.

That’s right, that Yuletide cheer you’re spreading? What exactly do you think Yule is? It's the fucking Pagan celebration of solstice.
And those “Christmas” traditions? They’re not just like Pagan rituals, they fucking are Pagan rituals. Way before your Jesus got all magical with the bread and fishes, the Romans were celebrating the birth of Mithra on . . . guess? Go on – guess.
December fucking twenty fifth. What a weird coincidence, eh shithead..?
Practically the whole thing is ripped off from the fucking Druids and the Romans. Twelve days? Check. Exchanging gifts?
Check. Mistletoe? Check. And you’d better fucking believe that those decorated trees that Gibson and Co. are so bent out of shape over are as Pagan as the Rune and Crystal Shack at Pentagramfest 2005. You might as well be building miniature fucking Stonehenges in your den or rec room alongside the bar.

And don’t you read your own goddamn Bibles? Jesus was born when? In the middle of winter? Lot of Shepherds out watching their flocks around that time of year in Bethlehem?
No, because they’d be freezing their fucking asses off.
Tell you what – y’all go figure out which one of the different Bible stories about the birth of Baby Jesus® you want to believe, and then we’ll argue about whether it fucking happened like that or not.

Christians just stole a bunch of traditions from other cultures, slapped them together, stuck a fucking tinfoil star on top and called it the Most Important Holiday of the Year. Modern American Christmas makes Michael Jackson look positively organic.

But you boys at FOX still freak out every year about how everyone's out to get your special trees. This is really the most important thing you have to talk about? Whether Target says Happy Holidays or Merry Christmas?
Here’s a brainstorm: there’s a fucking war on. Our soldiers are out there dying in an Islamic shithole Country while you guys do your 14th live feed of the day from WalMart to show us what good little consumers we are. What Would Jesus Do?
He’d jump over that newsdesk and kick your ass for that shit. Are you sure you want to hang your journalism credentials on a story about what some guy calls a tree?
They should break one of the branches off and shove it up his arse raw and with the splinters still intact.

Well we’ve fucking had it. You want to play bullshit games and scream about how God’s fucking judgment is gonna come raining down on us if we don't start watching our vocabulary? Go right the fuck ahead. But let me clue you in on something: fire and brimstone ain’t no deterrent for us. We’re not going to hell, assholes, we’re fucking in hell. We live with you.

And fuck Easter too, you fertility-rite-celebrating, whiny, self-righteous, don't-know-the- history-of-your-own-religion assholes.

Fuck off.

My kids school no longer has x-mas plays. They are not allowed to pray in school. In her religion class, they do not study any form of Christianity. Bill O'Reilly was cleared of the sex allegations,and if you would have kept up with that bit of the news, you would know that Bill O'Reilly's lowers WANTED them to release the alleged tapes because there were none. I could go on, but it would be a waste of bandwidth and your going to believe what you want no matter what I say.

I'm usually on 147.030. There are so many high powered splattering radios here, CB is useless and all the locals don't turn it on anymore.
I tried to check in to the sideband net Tuesdays at 7:30PM. (36USB, please try to make it next week) I could barely hear net control. I did better joining a net in Chestertown on 147.375! When I get my General next year, I'll be sending daily interference complaints to the uncle if these assholes splatter on my 2950 at 28 MHz! All radio users are the same type of people when you get down to it. We sit behind a mike talking to strangers.
However, I do believe in SHARING the available bandwidth and allowing others to use it as well. I don't care if someone runs an amp. I just want them to use it properly. </soapbox>

CB is a very laid back atmosphere and I miss being able to use it.

CB is as good as ever in Southern NJ. There are more people here, then in 1983.

hmm I replied to this once but the net seems to have eaten that you make an interesting suggestion, not one i endorse but interesting you realy want an answer

the answer ois simple it seems the tareget off balance make him make more msitakes and in general makes me safer

Carl Rove, and Bill Cllton both agree such tactics works since being this barrage style I have stop receiving the death threat email for example.

this negitive capaign is unpleasent to me as well but the over all is better for me these would not be crosspoted over to .CB if stevei did not insist on making his attacks there too

sorry for any incovenaince

Hello Stevo:

No I haven't heard of this guy, sorry. Maybe he got walked on by a guy with a Interceptor 10K?!?!?!!?

The problem is that the Mojave Desert covers 4 states, so the guy could be almost any where. There is a lot guys out there living in a old mine and run a generator to charge the batteries. Scratching out a living from the mine. Ask em if he is close to Miss Dinah's fillin station.

Actually he said something along the lines of " you can lead a dumb cber to a good antenna but you can't make him buy one". He had nothing but high praise for you and the I 10K.

I only was able to catch bits and pieces since conditions weren't very good but he had some funny quips. He told one dude to 'stop repeating that damn cqdx so much it's getting pretty damn annoying'. :)

Reeling? That's a hoot. Laughing at a sick weirdo who is so frustrated over something in a NG that he drives almost 400 miles round trip and takes pictures of peoples' residences is what is actually happening. Your frustration and inability to do anything about the AKC is so obvious. Too bad your mommy didn't ever spank your ass in the K Mart for whining and crying for candy and toys. If she had you would be more psychologically prepared to deal with it. Plus, just MAYBE you wouldn't have turned out to be a sissy Perto toilet dweller.

Thank you mopeythetic. Always love to have a good laff at your expense.

The voice of one...er two, crying in the wilderness...

...against a strong wind in a sand storm.

Listen to'm both, especially like the stuff about aliens.

Hey the three night comedy show.

With a list characters like that Sunday should be a real belly whopper. The question is do I want to record this garbage or not?

One of them who says he's a 'remote viewer' claims that several of his protege's have picked several winning lottery no's. Of course when they are asked to come forward to substantiate the claims, the usual excuses of 'confidentiality' and other such is usually stated.

Fuckin crosspoters predict this, If you don't stop crossposting I will personally make all of my posts to your group under a number of aliases till hell freezes over.
My second prediction is you are all a bunch of livin in yo mamma's basement playin D&D mother fuckers.
Third prediction is you won't know anything about me using what you laughingly refer to as psychic abilities.

Once again, an act that has no relation to another's act can not be used Doubt it had anything to do with the officer littering. Most likely he didn't prove his case or the information on the ticket concerning the violation wasn't good enough to convict.

Agreed. The cig butt presents much more of a problem than the paper products which break down over time.

See above. You may be confusing yourself with jury nullification. In any event, littering was never found to be unconstitutional.

Hi, I am just checking in...

I set the 1/4GP up for my brother in his attic and it works good... the only problem is it is messing up one TV in the house. You can slightly hear him talking over the TV and this is with CABLE. I think the tv has a problem. but other than that it works great thanks for all the help guys.

Now I just got to stop being lazy and put uf the used A99 I bought for my house...

Jim,

Try a TVI filter. Also, make sure the radio is ground to a ground rod outside the house.

The problem might be that it's too close to the wires inside his house.

I would have used the word "bullet" for "fact", but that was not appropriate in this venue.
